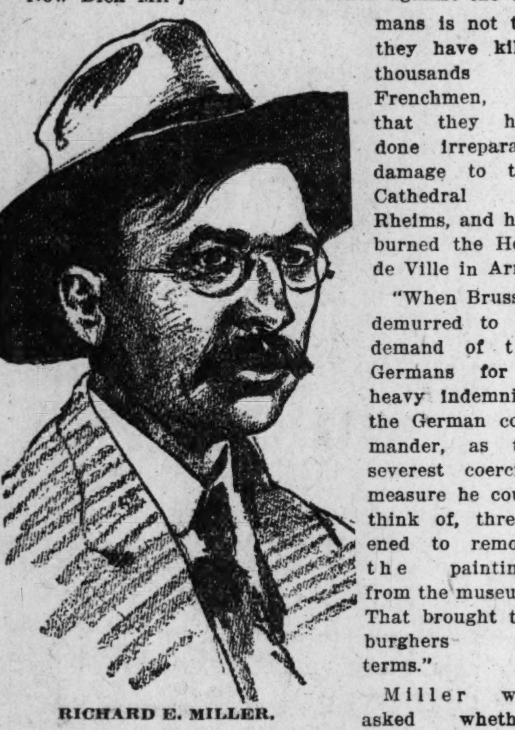
"Europe's War America's Opportunity to Become World's Center in Art"

Richard E. Miller, Former Post-Dispatch Illustrator, Who Has Won Fame Abroad, Tells of Havoc Wrought to Painting and Sculpture, Market for Which Will Be Dead There for Many Years.

By CARLOS F. HURD

WE advance. A few years ago we were being told, by everyone who was supposed to know, that art in St. Louis was "on the bum." Now Dick Miller, St. Louis and pre-eminently successful painter, has come from Paris to tell us that art in Europe is on the—is under a decided eclipse and that America has a chance to become the world's art center, with St. Louis as an American Dresden or Munich, if not a Paris or Florence.



RICHARD E. MILLER.

He also tells us—warns us, in fact—that this country is likely, if the war lasts much longer, to be flooded with paintings from Europe, unsalable there by reason of the war. When this country seemed in danger of being flooded with European stocks, the stock exchanges were closed. Whether the art galleries will have to be closed to guard against an influx of miscellaneous canvases, Miller does not advise us.

Dick Miller—Richard E. Miller, his name appeared 16 years ago on the roll of the Post-Dispatch art department—has been in Paris since 1899, and has been successful almost from the first. He has taken all the salon medals, and has sold four paintings to the gallery of the Luxembourg—more than any other American painter. Six years ago the cross of the Legion of Honor was conferred on him. (This is now an even more exclusive distinction than it was then, for the French Government has lately "deleted" the names of a number of German artists, scientists and literati from the legion's roll). In this country he has taken first prizes in Philadelphia and Chicago exhibitions.

No Garret-Crust Period.

THERE was no garret-and-crust period in Miller's artistic career. The scenes of "La Boheme" were not enacted by him, even when he was new and unknown, with no bank account to speak of. Percy MacKaye and Walt Mason, who, in their different ways, have "made poetry pay," have a parallel in Miller's profitable work with the brush. But painting is not paying anybody much at present, and Miller has found Paris, former art capital of the world, a peculiarly unencouraging place this season.

"The war has not only stopped the sale of art works in Europe," said Miller, "it has stopped their production. War time is no time for painting or modeling, even for those on whom the war makes no personal demands. It destroys the inspiration and the desire for artistic creation.

"Many of the French painters and art students have gone to the war. In the democracy of the army, a noted painter may become a trench digger. Those who have not gone to the front are manning the civilian commissary. Artists and their wives are peeling potatoes and ladling out soup to the poor. One of the soup kitchens run by artists, which charges those who can pay it 10 cents, and serves others free, has been almost a financial success.

"Quite a number of the American artists and students have joined the foreign command in the French army, and are at the front.

"There is to be no fall or spring salon, and art interest in Paris is at the lowest ebb. No one cares about painting, nor do the painters care about it.

"Of course, I refer only to new art production. There is no indifference to the great treasures of art and architecture which enrich the warring countries. The greatest grievance of the French against the Germans is not that they have killed thousands of Frenchmen, but that they have done irreparable damage to the Cathedral of Rheims, and have burned the Hotel de Ville in Arras.

"When Brussels demurred to the demand of the Germans for a heavy indemnity, the German commander, as the severest coercive measure he could think of, threatened to remove the paintings from the museum. That brought the burghers to terms."

Miller was asked whether the war would not furnish a vast range of subjects for painting, and whether a new crop of Remingtons and Verestchagins, and of portrayers of such scenes as the capture of Napoleon III, and the interview of Bismarck and Thiers, would not spring up.

"I think," he replied, "that most painters will be willing to leave those scenes to the photographers and the sketch artists, who, in the nature of things, will have the first chance at them.

"This war is not especially rich in subjects for the painter. Long-range artillery fighting and trench operations, with very little of the element of personal combat, furnish few themes for the painter.

"The ordinary observer, viewing the military operations of today, hardly knows what the soldiers are doing, and certainly gets no idea of the effect their acts may have on the campaign as a whole. The painter cannot visualize a scene like that, which even the newspaper artist has to cover with descriptive wording and supplement with explanatory paragraphs of type.

"Then, too, the story-telling picture is dying out. The historic canvas, with its soldiers and statesmen, and its background of unimportant bystanders, is very well for a public building, or, to a limited degree, for art galleries. But private picture buyers, who make the art market what it is, do not care for such things.

"The theory of art is decoration, and buyers of paintings seek decorative effect, just as do buyers of fine furniture. The paintings that are in demand are figure paintings, in which sometimes two persons appear, and more frequently one person. Humorists complain about buying art catalogs and finding them full of such titles as 'Portrait of a Lady,' 'Boy With Dog,' and the like, but the fact is that these are the pictures people wish to see, and to buy.

"Yet nine-tenths of the painters are doing landscapes. It is easier to paint landscapes. I paint them, but only for recreation, and not usually with the idea of selling them. I don't find a demand for them, or no demand to be compared with the demand for figure paintings, which are usually poses of a model in a studio.

America's Art Future Great.

"THE European art market is closed and will remain practically closed for years to come. America should become the world's art center—that is to say, the modern art center. Europe has the old masters, as it has the old cathedrals, and the paintings are almost as firmly fixed in their places as

SKETCHED AT DAYTON ST. COURT BY Marguerite Martyn

By Setting Aside Special Days for the Settlement of the More Trivial of This Class of Cases, Energetic Official Finds He Can Relieve the Pressure of the Regular Docket, While at the Same Time Rendering Decisions Tending to Convert Angry Neighbors Into Friends.

By Marguerite Martyn.

WHILE another City Attorney is laboring first with the Police Board, then with the Prosecuting Attorney and the Mayor to secure the enactment of an ordinance that will permit the establishment of a Court of Domestic Relations, young Mr. Harry Seidel, the first and, I believe, the only Assistant City Attorney appointed by Mayor Kiel, has gone ahead and shown what can be accomplished in that direction without waiting upon the tedious processes of the law.

Mr. Seidel, in a small back room out at Dayton Street Police Court, has been holding, after court adjourns, two afternoons each week, what he calls "a Court of Arbitration."

To be convinced of how such informal proceedure, plus one energetic young appointee, willing to give unreservedly of his time, can dispose of so-called clothes-line row cases, too trivial to take up the time of a regular tribunal, one had only to witness with what neatness and dispatch Mr. Seidel, single-handed, wiped some 21 of these cases off the docket in one afternoon.

"And I've never had a single 'come-back,'" said he. "My severest penalty, the threat to bring the offenders a second time to trial in a higher court, with the workhouse in the offing, has never needed to be called into execution."

After listening to the testimony in some of the cases one is bound to agree that in saving the Court's time for more serious cases a domestic relations tribunal is an urgent need and that not the least purpose served by these little private hearings is anticipating and preventing some of the low comedy for which idlers have been wont to find the audience room of Dayton Street Court attractive.

Low Court Comedy Abolished.

"THERE is no more unexpected levity to threaten the dignity of the Court," said the serious-minded, self-appointed Judge. "I keep all the comedy in here. In this particular I have the hearty approval of Judge Sanders, who, indeed, favorably regards the whole venture.

The first case referred to Mr. Seidel that afternoon was that of Mrs. Biest, Mr. Lipke and—I feel I ought to add—Mrs. Biest's ducks.

The ducks were not in court, but all the Biests, all the Lipkes and their neighbors as witnesses to the number of 14 crowded the little room to overflowing.

Mrs. Biest, the plaintiff, earnest and agitated almost to the point of tears, in broken but copious English, recited how six long years of torment she had endured from her neighbor Lipke had culminated at last in his CURSING HER DUCKS.

Mr. Lipke's son had choked almost to strangulation the son of Mrs. Biest and he had quarreled with her tenants and driven them away, but at last, and this was too much, he had CURSED HER DUCKS.

Yes, the neighbors testified solemnly, this was true.

"Did he curse you?" asked the "Judge."

"No, not me," wailed Mrs. Biest, "but my ducks."

Mr. Biest likewise intimated he, too, had been able "to take care of" any number of previous encounters with, and insults from, Mr. Lipke. He, too, was there solely to defend the ducks.

Mr. Lipke, in defense, made an excellent witness for himself. Defiance and determination were conspicuous in his attitude, his expression and the set of his jaw, but when it came to vocalization, he could only sputter and stammer. One wondered how he ever got a good, round, intelligible oath out of his system.

Anyhow, the verdict was:

"Mrs. Biest, the ducks being the bone of contention, you will have to remove them. I give you three days to get rid of those ducks.

"And, Lipke, if I ever hear another word of complaint about your behavior towards your neighbors, I will have you in police court and you may take the consequences."

The Case of Pinkey Patton.

WITH which decision both factions were hustled out, while the sonorous bass of the Sheriff haled the next contenders.

"Pinky Patton, Rachel Wright, George Washington; come into court."

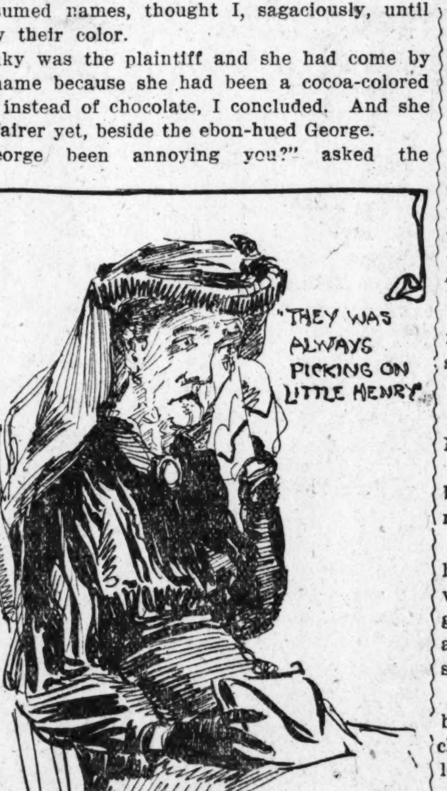
Pinky was the plaintiff and she had come by her name because she had been a cocoa-colored baby instead of chocolate, I concluded. And she was fairer yet, beside the ebon-hued George.

"George been annoying you?" asked the "Judge," moving his finger over his docket until he read, "Disturbance of the peace."



"THEY WAS ALWAYS PICKING ON LITTLE HENRY"

"No, he ain't, lately," said Pinkey softly, twisting her fingers about each other. Her toes likewise seemed convulsed and her soft eyes drooped as coyly as if she hadn't weighed almost 200 pounds.

"We was a-goin' together," she drawled on, "and we quit and he ain't said nothin' to me lately, but I was afraid he was a goin' to"——

"You were afraid he might annoy you?" interpolated the Judge.

"I ain't been near the girl. I ain't botha'd her. I wasn't goin' to botha her," protested George.

"Now see that you don't," began the "Judge." Wherewith he gave George a severe lecture and warned him of the penalty in store for him if ever Pinkey had him arrested again.

Pinkey looked as if she was almost sorry she had come. Neither seemed at all satisfied with the verdict. Pinkey and her grinning witness shuffled out and George followed with a hang-dog look, still grumbling. Outside I distinctly saw Pinkey cast an arch glance over her shoulder and wait for George to come along side. Probably, by this time, George was able to appreciate gentleness from Pinkey.

The cases followed each other in such startling rapidity and they were frought with such variety that often the mere routine of names eluded me.

But among them was that of "Esswein versus White." Mrs. Esswein, gorgeously arrayed in shades of purple and green made the room seem much smaller and dingier by comparison. She completely eclipsed White save for one corner of his pale forehead and one mild eye. Not until she was passing from the room was it discovered that Mr. Esswein had been there, backing up his wife's cause all the time.

Wouldn't Be Strung About War.

"THREE months ago he was my neighbor," began the plaintiff, "and we was friends, and he said one day did I know they got a revolution in Germany. And I didn't say nothing. I buy one extra und they was no revolution and that makes me mad and we have some words. And I been very sick, and when I gets well I look for that man, and last Tuesday I find him"——

"Three months ago you had a quarrel with your neighbor and you wait until now to have him summoned?" asked Mr. Seidel rather impatiently.

"I could not find him."

"That settles it, he's moved away. He won't bother you any more," and Mr. Seidel called the next case.

Mrs. Esswein was still willing to talk. "And I had a very serious operation," she was saying when the next we knew the bailiff, a stately and gallant personage, was bowing and offering his arm and Mrs. Esswein was smiling graciously as she was escorted from the room.

Two women with shawls on their heads were brought forward. They sat down in opposite chairs and glared at one another while the "Judge" looked up their number on his blotter.

"Well, we'll hear your side of it," he beckoned to the one on the right.

"Well, o' course, I live upstairs and they live downstairs, and we always was the best friends. Whatever she got mad at me for I don't know. Only I used to say, 'Why are you and Mary always picking on little Henry? And o' course I told my boy never to hit a girl—just to pull her hair, but not to hit her. I correct my boy, I do. And o' course one day I hit him a couple with the broom and o' course Mary she begins to laugh. And then I don't know any more till I see her and Mary and little Henry all on the ground together. And Henry was on the bottom. And ' course I said, 'Pull her hair, but don't hit her' "——

A pause to search for her handkerchief or regain control of her choking voice gave their interlocutor time to wheel about to the adversary. With great composure and conscious superiority the new witness began:

"Well, Judge, your honor"—(that she was the first to show a proper knowledge or experience with courtroom etiquette I hope was not lost on the "Judge")—"the first I knew I saw my girl on the ground. And I only said to little Henry, 'I don't want her hair pulled. They'll grow now while she's little, but they won't grow when she's older and that's all I said, Judge, your honor, so"——

"So that's the reason you were summoned into court. Now the best you women can do is to have nothing to say to each other at all. This court forbids you to speak to each other and if I hear of your doing so, you know the penalty that awaits you."

"They probably will get together and patch up their quarrel or begin another," observed Mr. Seidel when they had departed. "But this court will not hear of them again." The bailiff was calling out ever so many names to which he got no response.

Many Settle Quarrels

"WHY don't they answer to their names?" I asked.

"Because many of them get together out there and patch up their differences rather than face my judgments, which must have got the reputation of being rather unsatisfactory all around. You can see them slipping out in groups after conferences among themselves.

"So much the better. After a time perhaps there will be no need even for this court to waste time over clothesline rows."

Mr. Seidel's mask of severity falls off when relieved for a moment of his judicial pose and his countenance relaxes into youthful lines that indicate keen appreciation of fun.

"This next case is one in which I believe the court has served the ideal purpose of reformation rather than punishment," he chuckled. Then his face straightened to gravity as most shrinking, cringing little wo an I ever saw was almost dragg into the room by the kindly bail Timidly she sat on the farthest ed of the farthest chair.

"I have decided to parole you your husband, Mrs. Blank" (course that isn't her name), said the Judge. "As long as he can give a good account of your attending strictly to your own affairs, you need not come to court again."

Greatly surprised, apparently, and vastly relieved, but still frightened it did not take Mrs. Blank long t disappear.

"She was one of 10 witnesses, women, who lined up here one mor ing to testify on behalf of one nei bor against another," explained Seiled. "Such a number of wo deserting their household duties voluntarily spend a whole mor in police court was deserving of pu lic censure, I thought. I issued summons for every one of th When they gasped out, 'Why?' said, 'For not attending to your ow business.'

"After court adjourned this wo an you saw here came to me in h terics crying that she never been arrested before and begg

BELGRADE'S FALL GIVES AUSTRO-GERMAN ALLIANCE IMPORTANT ADVANTAGE

Prof. Usher Points Out That It Not Only Will Open Danube to Austria's Fleet but Also Will Facilitate Transportation of Arms to Turkey.

By ROLAND G. USHER,
Author of "PAN-GERMANISM."

DR. USHER.

THE confirmation of the news that Belgrade has fallen into the hands of the Austrian armies, marks the first really significant success that the Austrians have obtained, and one might almost say the first definite success that either army of either side has attained in Europe.

The strategic position of Belgrade is commanding. It controls the Danube River at the place where the continental road from Vienna and Central Europe passes into the defiles of the Balkans on the way to Constantinople and the Far East. Next to Adrianople, where the road leaves the mountains, Belgrade is probably the most important strategic spot in Southern Europe, and its possession has been from the first the chief reason which has led the Austrians to desire so ardently the annexation of Servia.

The control of the roads is absolutely essential. With Belgrade in their hands, they may soon secure the rest, for they now lack only that section of the road which reaches from Belgrade itself to the Bulgarian boundary. Of course this assumes that Bulgaria is still essentially an ally of Austria, as she has been for the last two years.

Opens Danube to Fleet.

WHILE the capture of Belgrade is at most only a preliminary step in the conquest of Servia which alone can secure it to Austria in permanent possession, it has an immediate effect upon the war itself because it opens the Danube to the Austrian fleet and will put Bulgaria and Austria into contact by water. This is of the utmost consequence. It will allow the Austrians and Germans to ship munitions of war to Turkey much more rapidly and easily than before, and will avoid the necessity of sending them by rail through Rumania.

Indeed, the Rumanians have objected to the transit of arms, not so much because of their ethical conceptions of neutrality, but because arms in the hands of Bulgarians and Turks simply furnish the latter with weapons against the Rumanians.

The Turk, as has already been pointed out in this series, is to play a substantive part in the war, but his ability to do so depends almost entirely upon the ability of the Germans to supply him with the needful munitions which the Turk cannot make. The fall of Belgrade, therefore, will undoubtedly have its effects in the campaign in the Near East.

Austrian Army's Good Work.

WE have been hearing much lately about the great inefficiency of the Austrian army, but this exploit will show that after all there is something to be said for the Austrians, who have waged a campaign successfully in the south against an army by no means negligible at the same moment that they were meeting the Russians in the north. Unless we are mistaken, the capture of Belgrade has been no mere by-play, but presages a very real attempt to defeat the Servians and free Austria of this foe in her rear.

Here we begin to approach the ramifications which the war inevitably produces. Every success for either side brings not only advantages but disadvantages. The capture of Belgrade and the probable defeat of the Servians, and the consequent occupation of Servia by Austria, will immensely strengthen the Austrian position in the Balkans.

It might almost be said that the Austrians' dream of dominating the Balkans will have come true and might endure longer than the duration of the war. This new position of Austria would enable her, undoubtedly, to overrun Montenegro and Albania, and would at once bring about the eventualities which the Italians have long anticipate with such evident fear. All this [illegible] fall of Belgrade spells to the Italians, and conceivably may furnish the necessary spur to the vacillating minds needed to produce in Ital an unquestioned majority in favo of the allies.

Italy Must Act Soon.

INDEED, if Italy is to act at al in the western Balkans, her tim is now, before the Servians actually beaten. The fall of Belgrade throws them back upon a li of defense much further south a increases tenfold the danger of c quest. If the Italians wait to ma sure that Austria is strong eno to overrun the western Balk while the Russian campaign is being vigorously pushed, they take the field too late to be effecti The fall of Belgrade is their sig for action, if they are contemplati any action.

Rumania also has been look askance at Austrian progress in south, and has certainly decline fulfill the earlier promise of rulers to Austria and Germany. she contemplates action advers Austria, she must move before Turks make too much headway, before the Servians are beaten. fall of Belgrade will allow the trian gunboats access to the R ian Danube, and will make her tion much more difficult than it been thus far. We may see, the fore, in the next few days a disti shift of the situation in Europe a result of the fall of Belgrade.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Inconsistent.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Once upon a time someone wrote some words to the effect that consistency is a rare jewel.

America stands aghast at the horrors of the great war and with our usual warm-heartedness we are endeavoring to alleviate the sufferings of the unfortunates in the warring countries. We are besieged with appeals to subscribe to these funds and many of us have contributed according to our means.

But on the same page, often, where accounts of the collections are made, the papers print accounts also of the fiendish activity of the American cartridge factories, working three shifts to supply bullets! We also see accounts of how many thousands of horses and other supplies have been shipped from here to the nations at war. How is this? America has it within her power to materially shorten this war by shutting off supplies of all kinds.

Would it not seem up to Congress to pass a law forbidding exportation of all supplies whatever until the war has been called off, and thus give official expression to the sentiments of the American nation?

Or does the national conscience and imagination not as yet rise above the dollar mark?

Japan and Germany.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Under the headline, "Japan in Europe," a writer for the Post-Dispatch warns Japan not to listen to the alluring proposition of the allies, asking Japan to send a huge trained army to take part in the European war theater. For myself, as a son of Nippon, I perfectly agree with the writer's advice to Japan, and wish other sober-minded Japanese would agree with him, too.

Should Japan send a huge army to Europe, it is beyond doubt she would inflict a heavy damage on the Germans, which ultimately might end in the defeat of Germany. However, such conduct on the part of Japan, in my opinion, will be forbidden by the law of nature. Perhaps Japan, by doing this, may pluck and eat this evil fruit of war for a time, but its retribution will be sure to follow, as sure as night follows the day. We reap what we sow.

Another agent that possibly will make more war with Germany less popular is a strong pro-German sentiment that has been prevailing among the intellectual classes of Japan, because Japan owes much to Germany both in learning and in the development of her internal affairs; also Germany is not so much a rival of Japan, political as well as commercial, as America, England and Russia are, and there is not much German activity in the Orient. Reflecting upon these things, I would say without hesitation that, should Japan happen to succumb to the allies' overtures and send a big army to Europe, it will be the result of the vainglorious desire for her military exploit, advocated by the near-sighted statesmen and ambitious military clique.

Fortunately, however, for Japan, she has still a few well-poised leaders, who are strong enough to control the situation against those inexperienced adventurers.

Ushers for Street Cars.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

There seems to be a lot of discussion in regard to the fact that the patrons of our street cars have a tendency to stand in the back of crowded cars, thereby leaving the front half of the aisle vacant.

As a remedy for this, I would suggest that the U. R. Co. have an usher on every car, whose duty it would be to see that the front half of the car receives its share of straphangers.

Diagnosis of Diseases.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Do not let the general public be misled by your article in this evening's Post-Dispatch, quoted by Dr. Woodruff, giving one of the causes for the recent deaths from diphtheria, through the incompetency of the physician or wrong diagnosis. Those days have passed in which a diagnosis was made after death. I remember a story told by an old country physician who said that when a person died with throat trouble, it was diagnosed as diphtheria; if he got well it was considered a simple case of tonsillitis. In my time at school we were taught to take every case of sore throat seriously and treat as such, and if every physician was to follow this rule there would be fewer mistakes in diagnosis and fewer deaths.

GOLDMAN, HAPGOOD ET AL.

The revolutionists have had their day in St. Louis. Hutchins Hapgood has expounded the blessings of Syndicalism and sabottage to the City Club. Emma Goldman, in a series of lectures, has depicted the abject slavery of Americans under their own government and has urged the overthrow of all government in order to free the people from their tyrants.

All of these revolutionary ideas are importations from continental Europe. They are born of genuine tyranny imposed upon the people by power outside of their control. European countries have made progress, but there still remains in a number of the leading nations caste and class. The peoples are still struggling against hereditary power, hereditary class distinctions, and imperial control of government. They have not gained the right of self-government. Great changes have been made since Jefferson expressed the hopelessness of bringing the common people of Europe to the standard of enlightenment and self-government existing in the American republic; but there is yet a great deal of truth in the view which he expressed in his letter to Edward Carrington:

> Experience declares that man is the only animal which devours his own kind; for I can apply no milder term to the Governments of Europe and to the general prey of the rich on the poor.

It can still be said of most of Europe that one-half of the people are born booted and spurred, to ride the other half. Finding themselves repressed, without the power to gain the kind of government they want and just social and industrial conditions, the masses grasp at revolutionary schemes to obtain their ends. Hosts of European wage earners coming out of fixed oppression bring with them to America a hatred of all government and a belief that the only possible hope for working people lies in violent revolutionary action.

These revolutionary ideas with regard to government and the necessity of violence have no place in America. The government we are asked to strike down is our own. The conditions we are asked to change by radical violent action are of our own making or at least exist with our own consent. The people of this country can change the control of government, the form of government, the laws, whenever a majority persistently works for a change.

Majorities absolutely rule in the United States. A persistent majority can repeal every law on the statute books, state or national, relating to property, the conditions of business, the relationship of employer and employe. The laws of property and inheritance are statute laws, changeable by legislative majorities. The Constitution may be amended whenever a persistent majority of the people want it amended.

Within a generation a peaceful revolution in methods of government has been practically accomplished. A persistent majority in favor of the direct election of Senators has amended the Constitution. A persistent majority in favor of income taxation has amended the Constitution. A persistent majority in favor of direct legislation has gained its end. A persistent majority in favor of inheritance taxes, or even against inheritance laws, could effect any desired change.

The trouble with our revolutionists is that they do not realize the power the American people possess. They are denouncing conditions that exist elsewhere. They are not willing to wait for a majority. They want to accomplish their purposes without resorting to the methods of discussion, agitation and co-operative political action which are the methods of free peoples controlling their own government. They want minority rule by violence instead of majority rule by law.

Fortunately, these transplanted revolutionary ideas do not flourish here long. The soil is not suited to them. Education eliminates the ignorance, prejudice and passion growing out of oppression which are the conditions of successful revolutionary propaganda.

Revolutionary agitation has a value. As a criticism of and a protest against wrongful social, industrial or political conditions it frequently arouses the minds and consciences of the public. But in America its true expression is found not in violence but in necessary changes accomplished by majorities under the forms of law.

There is no necessity for revolution in America. We progress by evolution.

WHY NOT TELL THE TRUTH?

W. G. Van Antwerp, an official of the New York Stock Exchange, is the latest railroad capper to try to fool the people with misleading comparisons of freight rates on American and European railroads. His statement is being widely quoted in the American press. For example, he says:

> It costs 7 mills, on the average, to haul a ton of freight a mile in America, whereas in England it costs 2.33 cents, in France 1.41 cents, and in Germany 1.42 cents.

The truth:

In England: Railroads are privately owned and monstrously overcapitalized. Through their powerful "pull" in Parliament, they are free to and do charge "all the traffic will bear." They own one-third of the 4800 miles of canals with which England was criss-crossed in an earlier period at a cost of over $200,000,000, and they dominate service and charges on the other two-thirds. They have retarded the development of England's canals, so that with a few exceptions these have no boats bigger than 30 to 40 tons' capacity, as against an average of 300 tons on the French canals. In a word, they have "put the canals out of business" so far as they could, just as the privately owned American railroads have done. The English ton mile rate freight charge, the highest in the world, is the result.

In Germany: Prussian, Saxon and other governments own and operate 96 per cent of the railroads, and control absolutely rates and service on the other 4 per cent. All heavy, bulky, non-perishable freight goes on canals and canalized rivers also owned and controlled by Government, at one-sixth the rail rate. Only light, high-grade, perishable freight goes by rail, excepting only coal hauled to one or two steel centers not yet reached by canals. It is the average on this narrowly restricted rail freight in Germany which Mr. Van Antwerp compares with the American ton mile average of 7.29 mills, covering all classes of freight from granite blocks and baled hay to fruits, silks and honey. The average of German inland rail and water freight rates is far lower than the American rate of 7.29 mills per ton mile.

In France: Government owns a much smaller percentage of the railway mileage, but controls all, as it does the inland waterways, on which are more than 15,000 freight boats, mostly privately owned, with average cargo capacity exceeding 300 tons.

In France, as in Germany, the transportation systems, of rail and water co-ordinated to get most and best service at least cost, are managed primarily to serve the nation's industry and promote its commerce, and not, as in England and America, primarily to create profits for the private owners.

It is still an open question in the minds of many thoughtful men which of these ideals, these contrasting systems, is best for the United States. But surely our railroads have nothing finally to gain by misrepresenting the facts. It will be better for them to "come clean" with the people, because the people are no longer dependent upon books written to the order of the American railroads for the truth about European railroads. Indeed, the peddling of that kind of bunkum impeaches the business intelligence of the men who do it and of the men who pay for it.

CORRECTING AN INJUSTICE.

Oklahoma's law permitting railroads in that State to deny sleeping, dining and chair car service to negroes is unconstitutional. The United States Supreme Court has so ruled.

The court does not order the roads to carry negroes and whites in the same cars; it requires only that equal service shall be given to all passengers, regardless of race.

All Southern railroads run day coaches for the exclusive use of negroes; white passengers are forbidden to ride therein. No Southern railroad has provided sleeping, dining or chair cars for negroes. Nor are negroes, except female servants accompanying their employers to care for children, permitted to ride in the Pullman coaches provided for white travelers.

If the ruling of the highest court shall be enforced—and it should be—the roads will have to divide their cars for negroes into compartments, as do the European railways, in order to provide the negroes service equal to that for whites, at the same price.

This will lay some extra expense on the roads. But it will be money well spent. When negroes learn they can buy Pullman car accommodations, many of them will do so, and the receipts from this source will very likely cover the extra cost.

Neither under private nor under public ownership of the railways will the Congress or the Supreme Court require of the South that free intermingling of races, in the same coaches, which neither race desires. But it is as well realized by liberal Southerners as by any other Americans that whatever tends to foster self-respect, and hence to encourage industry, thrift and cleanliness among the negroes, will greatly benefit all elements of the population.

HOW TO SEE EUROPE.

The experience of the American committee in London which financed Americans stranded in Europe after the war broke out suggests a way in which most of us might be able to see that battle-scarred continent after one side or the other surrenders. The committee advanced $265,000, and it has gotten back every cent of that money except $250 owed by a gentleman who has explained the delay.

Possibly if there were funds available with which to get back, many thousands of Americans who will not otherwise see Europe would risk a trip over. It is the getting back which occasions the most concern. What the fund raised by the relief committee did, in fact, was to give the tourists a breathing spell before they paid up, and that is perhaps all that anyone would need. It is true that in the present instance many were helped who would have been able to get home on their own hook except for the peculiar conditions imposed by the war, but that is not important. Under the circumstances they were only rendered as most of us feel we would be rendered about the time we started back—that is, destitute. The fact that they all paid the money back promptly ought to establish everyone's credit. While they were on the whole probably a little better able to repay promptly than most of us would be, the effect of what has happened is to prove the obligation of such a delicate nature that no one feels the least like evading it. We do hope that something more than these mere observations will come of the incident. There is going to be a great deal to see in Europe after the war, and Europe will need whatever she can get showing it to us.

A man who robbed a bank in the St. Louis suburbs has been sent to prison for 15 years. It is unnecessary to add that he robbed the bank from the outside.

The Chief of the St. Louis Fire Department does not want men who smoke cigarettes. If we must have fires, he wants them to start outside the department.

Emperor Francis-Joseph has just completed his sixty-sixth year on the Austrian throne. They are both feeble.

The Kaiser has visited the Austrian Generals at Breslau. He isn't saying what is the matter with them.

RECLAMATION OF A DEAD BEAT.

From the Detroit News.

A big six-footer walked into the office of the chief of the sociological department of the Ford Motor Co., one day. The chief is not a small man, but his visitor was larger, weighed more, and could have beaten him easily.

He was asked what he wanted.

"I want to know why I don't get $6 a day," said the workman.

The chief consulted the man's record. "You don't get $6 a day," he said "because you couldn't use it. You don't know how. You pay your board two weeks in advance; you stick the rest in your pocket. Your pocket has a hole in it and the money gradually slips out. By next payday you haven't a cent. You have a good time, or think you do, and just drift along. When you can show us that you are thrifty we will gladly help you."

"I have been a bum once," the man muttered, "and I guess I can be a bum again."

"You certainly can," replied the chief. "But don't be a fool."

The man was questioned, and it was learned that he had a mother, whom he had not seen or written to in five years. He owed money, but he calmly remarked that his creditors did not expect to be paid.

He was told to go out, see what he could do and return in six weeks.

In six weeks he came back. He was fairly well dressed.

"Come in and let me look you over," said the smiling chief.

He came in, put his hand in his pocket and drew out a letter.

"Have a look," he remarked.

The letter was from his mother. It was full of surprise and gratitude. She had been drifting hither and yon, the unwelcome guest of relatives, and at the time she received his letter she did not quite know what she was to do next. He had sent her $25, and it was a godsend.

Then he pulled out a receipt from some lodge he belonged to, acknowledging five years back dues. He pulled out a bill from a tailor. It was for $60 and he had paid $11 on it. Last of all, he pulled out a bank book, showing $14 to his credit.

And all that had been done in six weeks, without a cent of profit-sharing.

"Well, you have done pretty well, Bill," said the chief. "Hold on a while and come in again."

"For heaven's sake, how long have I got to hold on?" asked the workman.

"Until it doesn't hurt you. Then we will let you off."

Today that man has his mother living with him in Detroit. He is getting $6 tucked away in his pay envelope every day; he is buying a home and his debts are paid.

"He is going to make a good citizen," said the chief.

SILVER LEAF.—A clipping party is comparatively easy way of making money for a church. A number of parcels of all shapes and sizes, and containing all sorts of articles, are suspended on strings. Each purchaser is allowed to choose his parcel, which is then cut off its string on payment of the regular fee. The guild of one church made about $150 in the following way: Tiny silk bags (about two inches long) were made and sent to all the members of the congregation, requesting them to inclose a nickel for every foot of their height and a cent for every extra inch. Get some one to write an appropriate verse explaining the use of the bag. This may be given in combination with a tea or bazar.

H. A. M.—Mexican tamales: Boil a fowl in salted water until tender, strip the meat from the bones and chop it very fine, seasoning with garlic and red pepper, making it very hot with the latter. Have ready a paste made of cornmeal wet up with boiling water. Shape the meat into rolls the size of the little finger, and encase each in a covering of the paste. Cut the ends from the inner husks of Indian corn, leaving the husks about six inches long; wash these in boiling water; wrap each meat roll in a corn husk and tie with a narrow strip of the husk. In the liquor in which the chicken was boiled put two Mexican peppers, then lay the tamales in the liquor and cook for 25 minutes.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Inconsistent.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Once upon a time someone wrote some words to the effect that consistency is a rare jewel.

America stands aghast at the horrors of the great war and with our usual warm-heartedness we are endeavoring to alleviate the sufferings of the unfortunates in the warring countries. We are besieged with appeals to subscribe to these funds and many of us have contributed according to our means.

But on the same page, often, where accounts of the collections are made, the papers print accounts also of the fiendish activity of the American cartridge factories, working three shifts to supply bullets! We also see accounts of how many thousands of horses and other supplies have been shipped from here to the nations at war. How is this? America has it within her power to materially shorten this war by shutting off supplies of all kinds.

Would it not seem up to Congress to pass a law forbidding exportation of all supplies whatever until the war has been called off, and thus give official expression to the sentiments of the American nation?

Or does the national conscience and imagination not as yet rise above the dollar mark?

Japan and Germany.

Under the headline, "Japan in Europe," a writer for the Post-Dispatch warns Japan not to listen to the alluring proposition of the allies, asking Japan to send a huge trained army to take part in the European war theater. For myself, as a son of Nippon, I perfectly agree with the writer's advice to Japan, and wish other sober-minded Japanese would agree with him, too.

Should Japan send a huge army to Europe, it is beyond doubt she would inflict a heavy damage on the Germans, which ultimately might end in the defeat of Germany. However, such conduct on the part of Japan, in my opinion, will be forbidden by the law of nature. Perhaps Japan, by doing this, may pluck and eat this evil fruit of war for a time, but its retribution will be sure to follow, as sure as night follows the day. We reap what we sow.

Another agent that possibly will make more war with Germany less popular is a strong pro-German sentiment that has been prevailing among the intellectual classes of Japan, because Japan owes much to Germany both in learning and in the development of her internal affairs; also Germany is not so much a rival of Japan, political as well as commercial, as America, England and Russia are, and there is not much German activity in the Orient. Reflecting upon these things, I would say without hesitation that, should Japan happen to succumb to the allies' overtures and send a big army to Europe, it will be the result of the vainglorious desire for her military exploit, advocated by the near-sighted statesmen and ambitious military clique.

Fortunately, however, for Japan, she has still a few well-poised leaders, who are strong enough to control the situation against those inexperienced adventurers.

Ushers for Street Cars.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

There seems to be a lot of discussion in regard to the fact that the patrons of our street cars have a tendency to stand in the back of crowded cars, thereby leaving the front half of the aisle vacant.

As a remedy for this, I would suggest that the U. R. Co. have an usher on every car, whose duty it would be to see that the front half of the car receives its share of straphangers.

McKINLEY HIGH.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Do not let the general public be misled by your article in this evening's Post-Dispatch, quoted by Dr. Woodruff, giving one of the causes for the recent deaths from diphtheria, through the incompetency of the physician or wrong diagnosis. Those days have passed in which a diagnosis was made after death. I remember a story told by an old country physician who said that when a person died with throat trouble, it was diagnosed as diphtheria; if he got well it was considered a simple case of tonsilitis. In my time at school we were taught to take every case of sore throat seriously and treat as such, and if every physician was to follow this rule there would be fewer mistakes in diagnosis and fewer deaths.

GOLDMAN, HAPGOOD ET AL.

The revolutionists have had their day in St. Louis. Hutchins Hapgood has expounded the blessings of Syndicalism and sabottage to the City Club. Emma Goldman, in a series of lectures, has depicted the abject slavery of Americans under their own government and has urged the overthrow of all government in order to free the people from their tyrants.

All of these revolutionary ideas are importations from continental Europe. They are born of genuine tyranny imposed upon the people by power outside of their control. European countries have made progress, but there still remains in a number of the leading nations caste and class. The peoples are still struggling against hereditary power, hereditary class distinctions, and imperial control of government. They have not gained the right of self-government. Great changes have been made since Jefferson expressed the hopelessness of bringing the common people of Europe to the standard of enlightenment and self-government existing in the American republic; but there is yet a great deal of truth in the view which he expressed in his letter to Edward Carrington:

> Experience declares that man is the only animal which devours his own kind; for I can apply no milder term to the Governments of Europe and to the general prey of the rich on the poor.

It can still be said of most of Europe that one-half of the people are born booted and spurred, to ride the other half. Finding themselves repressed, without the power to gain the kind of government they want and just social and industrial conditions, the masses grasp at revolutionary schemes to obtain their ends. Hosts of European wage earners coming out of fixed oppression bring with them to America a hatred of all government and a belief that the only possible hope for working people lies in violent revolutionary action.

These revolutionary ideas with regard to government and the necessity of violence have no place in America. The government we are asked to strike down is our own. The conditions we are asked to change by radical violent action are of our own making or at least exist with our own consent. The people of this country can change the control of government, the form of government, the laws, whenever a majority persistently works for a change.

Majorities absolutely rule in the United States. A persistent majority can repeal every law on the statute books, state or national, relating to property, the conditions of business, the relationship of employer and employe. The laws of property and inheritance are statute laws, changeable by legislative majorities. The Constitution may be amended whenever a persistent majority of the people want it amended.

Within a generation a peaceful revolution in methods of government has been practically accomplished. A persistent majority in favor of the direct election of Senators has amended the Constitution. A persistent majority in favor of income taxation has amended the Constitution. A persistent majority in favor of direct legislation has gained its end. A persistent majority in favor of inheritance taxes, or even against inheritance laws, could effect any desired change.

The trouble with our revolutionists is that they do not realize the power the American people possess. They are denouncing conditions that exist elsewhere. They are not willing to wait for a majority. They want to accomplish their purposes without resorting to the methods of discussion, agitation and co-operative political action which are the methods of free peoples controlling their own government. They want minority rule by violence instead of majority rule by law.

Fortunately, these transplanted revolutionary ideas do not flourish here long. The soil is not suited to them. Education eliminates the ignorance, prejudice and passion growing out of oppression which are the conditions of successful revolutionary propaganda.

Revolutionary agitation has a value. As a criticism of and a protest against wrongful social, industrial or political conditions it frequently arouses the minds and consciences of the public. But in America its true expression is found not in violence but in necessary changes accomplished by majorities under the forms of law.

There is no necessity for revolution in America. We progress by evolution.

It is the getting back which occasions the most concern. What the fund raised by the relief committee did, in fact, was to give the tourists a breathing spell before they paid up, and that is perhaps all that anyone would need. It is true that in the present instance many were helped who would have been able to get home on their own hook except for the peculiar conditions imposed by the war, but that is not important. Under the circumstances they were only rendered as most of us feel we would be rendered about the time we started back—that is, destitute. The fact that they all paid the money back promptly ought to establish everyone's credit. While they were on the whole probably a little better able to repay promptly than most of us would be, the effect of what has happened is to prove the obligation of such a delicate nature that no one feels the least like evading it. We do hope that something more than these mere observations will come of the incident. There is going to be a great deal to see in Europe after the war, and Europe will need whatever she can get showing it to us.

FRIENDSHIP.

Friendship! Is't an idle word
That holds no bond to thee?
Friendship! Is't an idling wave
That breaks upon the sea?

H. J. PATEE.

A man who robbed a bank in the St. Louis suburbs has been sent to prison for 15 years. It is unnecessary to add that he robbed the bank from the outside.

The Chief of the St. Louis Fire Department does not want men who smoke cigarettes. If we must have fires, he wants them to start outside the department.

Emperor Francis-Joseph has just completed his sixty-sixth year on the Austrian throne. They are both feeble.

The Kaiser has visited the Austrian Generals at Breslau. He isn't saying what is the matter with them.

From the Detroit News.

A big six-footer walked into the office of the chief of the sociological department of the Ford Motor Co., one day. The chief is not a small man, but his visitor was larger, weighed more, and could have beaten him easily.

He was asked what he wanted.

"I want to know why I don't get $6 a day," said the workman.

The chief consulted the man's record. "You don't get $6 a day," he said "because you couldn't use it. You don't know how. You pay your board two weeks in advance; you stick the rest in your pocket. Your pocket has a hole in it and the money gradually slips out. By next payday you haven't a cent. You have a good time, or think you do, and just drift along. When you can show us that you are thrifty we will gladly help you."

"I have been a bum once," the man muttered, "and I guess I can be a bum again."

"You certainly can," replied the chief. "But don't be a fool."

The man was questioned, and it was learned that he had a mother, whom he had not seen or written to in five years. He owed money, but he calmly remarked that his creditors did not expect to be paid.

He was told to go out, see what he could do and return in six weeks.

In six weeks he came back. He was fairly well dressed.

"Come in and let me look you over," said the smiling chief.

He came in, put his hand in his pocket and drew out a letter.

"Have a look," he remarked.

The letter was from his mother. It was full of surprise and gratitude. She had been drifting hither and yon, the unwelcome guest of relatives, and at the time she received his letter she did not quite know what she was to do next. He had sent her $25, and it was a godsend.

Then he pulled out a receipt from some lodge he belonged to, acknowledging five years back dues. He pulled out a bill from a tailor. It was for $60 and he had paid $11 on it. Last of all, he pulled out a bank book, showing $14 to his credit.

And all that had been done in six weeks, without a cent of profit-sharing.

"Well, you have done pretty well, Bill," said the chief. "Hold on a while and come in again."

"For heaven's sake, how long have I got to hold on?" asked the workman.

"Until it doesn't hurt you. Then we will let you off."

Today that man has his mother living with him in Detroit. He is getting $6 tucked away in his pay envelope every day; he is buying a home and his debts are paid.

"He is going to make a good citizen," said the chief.

ANXIOUS.—Enuresis (bed-wetting) is caused by bladder disorder. Turpentine in some cases, not in others. Rubber diaper is recommended. It is well to consult specialist. Objection to being awakened every night at 11 o'clock is that it creates a habit. Drink nothing after 4 p. m. Circumcision is said to prevent. Physicians use medicine, hypnosis or electricity. Massage of the bladder has good results in some cases. Baths and exercise for weakly children. Sleep on side, even if necessary to tie around the waist a towel with a knot at the back. Large tonsils or adenoid growths, and also worms, are said to be the cause sometimes.

H. D.—One writer says: A diet of milk and milk only will surely reduce one from three to five pounds a week, and, according to this authority several quarts should be taken during the day as often as once in an hour or two. This does not take away strength as well as flesh. Broths, free from all fat, whey and the white of eggs are also good, but care should be taken not to allow oneself to get to the point of feeling faint. Drink plenty of cold water and hot water at least twice a day. Directly after rising and just before retiring are the best times to drink hot water. A teaspoonful of lemon juice can be added to the water.

SILVER LEAF.—A clipping party is comparatively easy way of making money for a church. A number of parcels of all shapes and sizes, and containing all sorts of articles, are suspended on strings. Each purchaser is allowed to choose his parcel, which is then cut off its string on payment of the regular fee. The guild of one church made about $150 in the following way: Tiny silk bags (about two inches long) were made and sent to all the members of the congregation, requesting them to inclose a nickel for every foot of their height and a cent for every extra inch. Get some one to write an appropriate verse explaining the use of the bag. This may be given in combination with a tea or bazar.

H. A. M.—Mexican tamales: Boil a fowl in salted water until tender, strip the meat from the bones and chop it very fine, seasoning with garlic and red pepper, making it very hot with the latter. Have ready a paste made of cornmeal wet up with boiling water. Shape the meat into rolls the size of the little finger, and encase each in a covering of the paste. Cut the ends from the inner husks of Indian corn, leaving the husks about six inches long; wash these in boiling water; wrap each meat roll in a corn husk and tie with a narrow strip of the husk. In the liquor in which the chicken was boiled put two Mexican peppers, then lay the tamales in the liquor and cook for 25 minutes.

—Copyright, 1914, by Philadelphia Ledger.

VILLA'S AMBITION.

Boston Globe: Francisco Villa, in the first official statement issued by him since he started south from Aguascalientes, says:

"My one ambition is that my people shall be free, and that no tyrant, under whatever name or at the head of whatever party, may oppress them because they cannot protect themselves. No one knows better than I that I am unsuitable for the presidency. I do not have any aims or designs upon it."

The ex-bandit, military genius of the Mexican revolution, still talks like a patriot and a person of common sense.

CARRANZA'S FAILURE.

New York Times: The folly of Carranza is strongly emphasized by the present attitude of his former associate. If Villa's modest declaration of his own unfitness for the presidency does not mean that he has no other ambition than to retire to his Sabine farm and write odes, it surely indicates that Villa has no present intention of claiming the place of Chief Executive. He and Carranza might have got along very well together if the vain, bombastic First Chief had been willing to make a few simple concessions. But Carranza, temporarily in power, has shown himself to be an utter incompetent, deficient alike in propriety and humor. With his executive office established in the lighthouse in Vera Cruz harbor, whence his next move must be toward Havana, he gravely directs the United States Government to remove its warships from Mexican waters. No comic dramatist ever imagined a more pitiful personage. He is fairly comparable with Holberg's famous Tinker, who, after his brief but unhappy experience as Burgomaster, reflects that

* * * "when we drop our humble tools
And set us up as thinkers,
We look the sorry lot of fools

VILLA'S OPPORTUNITY.

Philadelphia Record: If Villa disclaims presidential aspirations in good faith, and really means it when he says that he is not fitted for the presidency, he shows himself to be as sensible in peace as he has already proved himself energetic and resourceful in war. He protests that he does not desire the presidency and cares only to see the people of his country free from despotism under whatever name. In his methods of carrying on war Villa has not been fastidious, though it is claimed for him that he desired to carry on war in the most correct manner and stopped shooting his prisoners when he was told that that was no longer the fashion. If he can be taken at his word, or the words attributed to him, he may loom up into a veritable Father of his Country and the creator of a real republic in Mexico.

THREE OF A KIND.

Philadelphia Inquirer: There are only three of them now, although there may be others over night—three patriotic Mexicans claiming the provisional presidency of the so-called republic to the south of us.

Carranza, "first chief," naturally was in line for promotion. Unfortunately, he had a falling out with Villa, and Villa declared that never could Carranza be President of Mexico. And so the various "Generals" got together and Guttierrez was proclaimed President pending an election. Now it seems that Gonzales, no doubt scenting a possible opportunity in the general mixup, has named himself President and has appointed a Cabinet all of his own.

Carranza, having abandoned the capital and stationed himself at Vera Cruz as soon as the United States troops had left, maintains what he wishes everyone to believe is a huge army. He threatens his enemies—but with the ocean to embark upon if things go against him. Diaz and Huerta both fled from Mexico. Carranza is taking no chance of being hemmed in. Guttierrez has Villa back of him, while Gonzales is playing his own little game.

From which it is seen that after a run of more than a year of that delightful little comedy known as "watchful waiting," which was going to do so much for the Mexicans in particular and incidentally for mankind in general, Mexico is in a condition more chaotic than ever.

VILLA'S MISTAKEN POLICY.

Pittsburg Dispatch: The friendly relations of Villa to Guttierrez and Zapata hold out a promise that the path may be taken to establishing a Government by a peaceful election so that its title to power may be indisputable. But it forces itself on the minds that the close relations between Villa, Zapata and Guttierrez are not closer than those between Villa and Carranza until they quarreled over a point that is yet by no means clear to the public.

The trouble with Villa is the typical trouble with Mexico. He does not realize that because you differ with a man, whether on questions of policy or for personal reason, that does not afford reasons for driving him out of the country. Villa has stated that his quarrel with Carranza is because the latter has not instituted immediate measures for dividing up the great estates among the peons. But he does not see that so important a reform as that should not be gone about by a provisional Government, but by a permanent and constitutionally elected one. He is equally oblivious to the fact that even if Carranza is lax upon that point, the proper remedy is not war, but the free vote of the people.

CARRANZA'S ECLIPSE.

Cleveland Plain Dealer: Carranza, being restricted in native mental quality, cannot learn. No sooner does he seat himself in Vera Cruz than he demands the immediate removal of American warships from Mexican waters. He holds that the plainly visible vessels are derogatory to his dignity.

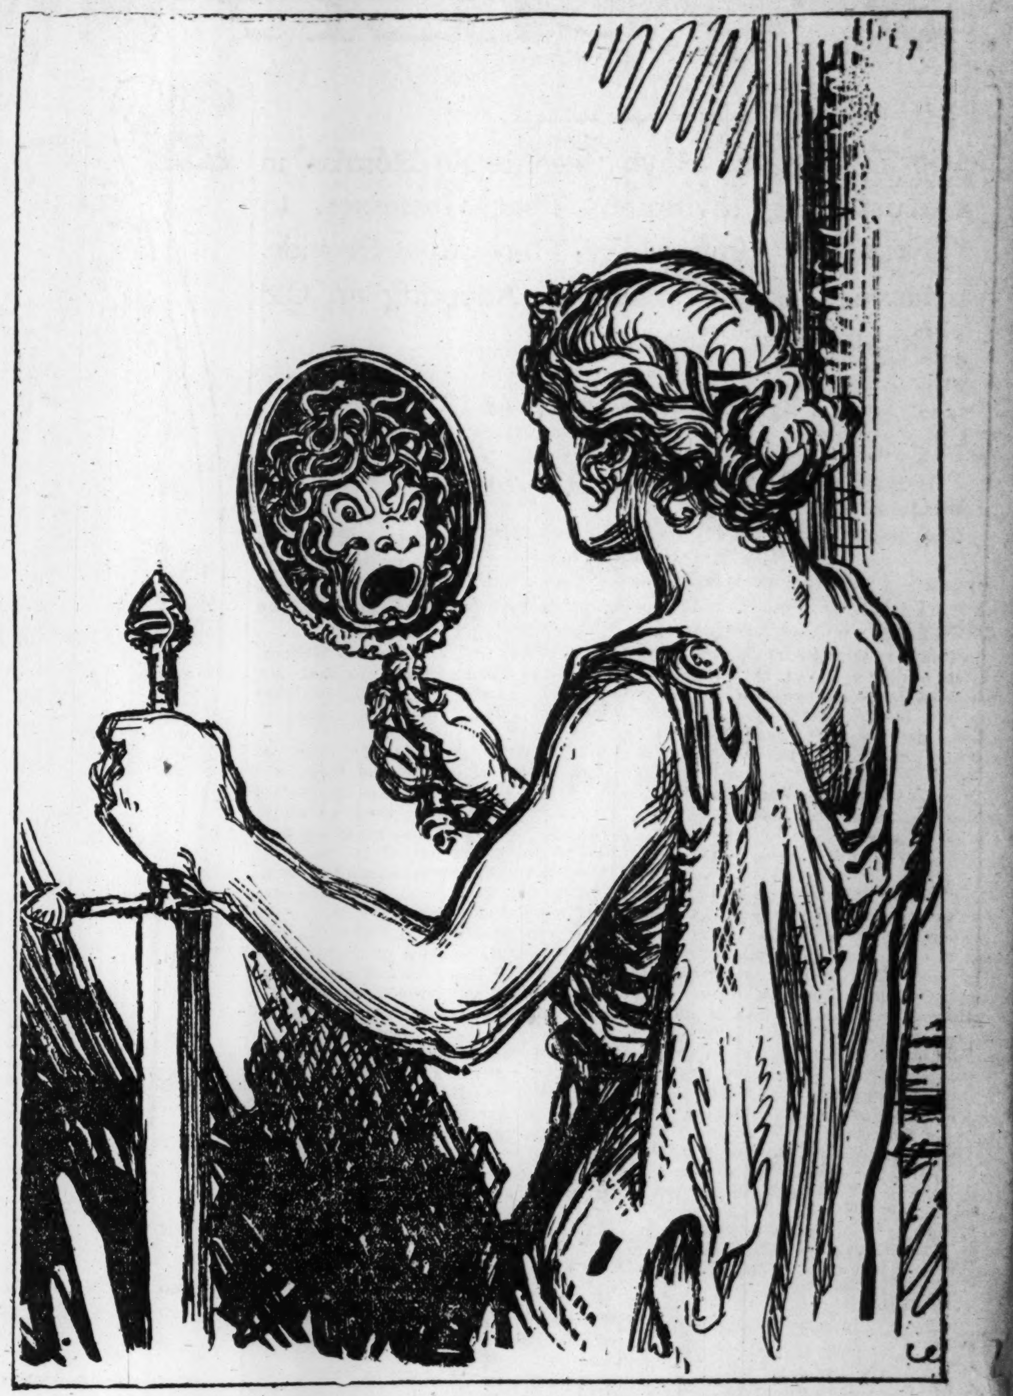
When the United States first occupied Vera Cruz, and thereby greatly facilitated the success of the Constitutionalist cause, Carranza protested and talked big. He has talked big ever since. But one would fancy that the time is at hand for him to talk very small.

For when the men of Villa and Zapata and the other ultra radicals capture Vera Cruz there will be no place for Carranza to go—except to sea. If American warships are still hovering in the offing he will be assured a safe exit and free transportation to some land of secure exile.

Had Carranza been less overburdened with sensitiveness and extreme dignity and a little more burdened with intelligence he might by this time have established a safe and sane government in Mexico. The Mexican people long remembered that he was the first to raise the standard of revolt against Huerta, and they were patient and long suffering—amazingly so for Mexicans. With all kindness they gave him all the rope he wished, and he has nearly completed the noose for his own neck.

VILLA THE REAL RULER.

Cleveland Leader: It is growing clearer every day that the bandit of the Chihuahua hills is going to be the real ruler of Mexico if he can beat down the opposition of the rivals and enemies who are still in arms in various parts of the country. He no sooner reached the suburbs than he began to receive foreign Consuls and delegations of Mexicans. They knew who was to be the master of Mexico, unless overthrown in battle, and Villa doubtless agreed with them perfectly.



CIVILIZATION LOOKS INTO THE MIRROR.

—Cesare in New York Sun.

America's Military Unreadiness

NEED FOR PREPARATION.

Washington Post: The builders of this nation, the men who staked their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in the war of independence, and the later generation which saved the Union, were not misguided as to the necessity of preparation for defense against foreign aggression. The Goddess of Liberty, standing upon the dome of the Capitol, is an armed figure. The liberty of the American citizen is not a hazy abstraction, but a vital fact, a priceless treasure to be guarded by "eternal vigilance."

If the United States would remain free, immune from aggression and able to enforce respect for its rights and the rights of its citizens, it must be able to fight.

Americans everywhere hope the present administration will be found responsive to the general demand for improvement in the national defense. No ships can be too good, no guns can be too big, no forts can be too formidable, no army can be too efficiently armed and drilled to guard the integrity of the United States and enforce its rights. The people expect the national Government to provide these defenses on a most thorough and modern scale.

GUNS AND GUNNERS.

Washington Times: The necessity of a large and efficient field artillery is proving out unanswerable in the European war. The artillery arm of the United States army at present musters about 5500 officers and men organized into 36 batteries. The artillery force in the National Guard is not much larger.

Military scientists have decreed that, because the difficulty of equipping and training artillerymen and cavalrymen in times of war is so great, those two arms of the service should be kept at an inflated strength in time of peace. In war the proportion should stand: Infantry, eight-tenths; cavalry, one-tenth, and artillery, one-tenth. In accordance with the foregoing rule the United States cavalry now makes up five-sixteenths of the whole regular army. The field artillery, however, is only one-sixteenth.

The War Department says that to face a first-class power in battle the American army should number 450,000 men. That force would include a regular army of 100,000, a National Guard force of about 150,000, and a volunteer force of 200,000. Therefore, to raise the field artillery would mean the equipping and training of about 35,000 men. Even the present National Guard artillerymen would need several months of training.

NO TIME TO STIR UP TROUBLE.

Indianapolis News: The President will be justified in "laying the cold hand of death"—as Representative Gardner puts it—on Gardner's proposal to investigate the "preparedness" of the United States. The Massachusetts Representative is the author of a resolution to inquire into the military condition of the country. Mr. Wilson wrote to Gardner asking him to refrain from taking further action until a conference could be held. The President said in his letter: "You may be sure that I do not have an attitude of indifference to the great subject which you broach." Mr. Gardner, after making one attempt to see the President, expressed himself gloomily. But public opinion is with the President. The present is no time to stir up trouble. The public is not indifferent to the nation's "preparedness," nor is it indifferent to the strict attitude of neutrality which it must maintain. We are in no danger from attack, and shall not be for some time to come. There will be time later on to pursue the proposed investigation—when the world is more at peace. Mr. Gardner's nervous apprehension is not shared by the majority.

The Crisis Past

Philadelphia Ledger: Events laden with the broadest financial significance have been crowded within the last week. Yesterday the Philadelphia Stock Exchange threw its doors wide open, following a resumption of bond operations on the New York Exchange and a complete resumption of all stock market operations in Chicago.

Thus in America's three greatest cities and three largest financial centers the embargo upon securities has been lifted after a dreary period of four months. A crisis far more perilous than any other in this country since the Civil War has been met and passed triumphantly. For a deliverance from the catastrophe of a panic, this nation may thank its cool-headed bankers and its patriotic brokers.

The public does not yet realize the calamity it faced on Aug. 1. Pressure of war on all Europe was about to make the United States the dumping ground of billions of dollars' worth of securities. Had the stock exchanges remained open, there would have poured out upon this country a greater deluge of liquidation than was ever witnessed before.

It is impossible to overexaggerate the collapse that would have followed such a flood. Banks, insurance companies, individual borrowers, merchants and all who use their securities to raise capital would instantly have felt a shrinkage of assets beyond any precedent.

Indeed, had the exchanges remained open, the desire of Europe to sell would have made the stock market business of brokers far heavier than it had been for years. These profitable transactions were barred out by the brokers themselves. One result, therefore, of this remarkable proceeding ought to be to banish forever the cheap claptrap about brokers and private bankers which holds them up as wolves who prey upon innocent victims.

But there is a world-wide omen in the opening of our stock exchanges. It means that America is now free to move forward in a very nearly normal course. It means also that the perils of a vast European liquidation are over. Foreign investors will not, according to this augury, attempt to liquidate their American securities, at least on a scale too large for our own people to handle successfully.

Finally, the resumption of stock market business points unerringly to this conclusion: that Europe now recognizes that it must finance its own destructive and useless war, for we shall not permit it to do otherwise.

Demand for Justice to Frank

THE GOVERNOR SHOULD ACT.

Louisville Courier-Journal: The right of a defendant to be present at every stage of his trial is not a purely technical right—it is a constitutional right, guaranteed by the ages; and if there is one supreme moment when that right should be irrevocably accorded, it is when the jury look the defendant in the face and condemn him to death. If that is not his constitutional right, overriding all petty rules or legislative enactments, then Magna Charta is nothing but a "scrap of paper," to be torn up at any time in the presence of any mob ripe for violence. Not only was this right denied Frank by the trial Judge, but the reason for the denial is conclusive evidence that no jury endowed with less than the highest moral and physical courage could give any man, innocent or guilty, a square deal or a fair verdict in such an atmosphere.

Assuredly the Governor of Georgia should interpose to forbid what will look like a legal murder in case the verdict stands.

LET JUSTICE BE DONE.

Pittsburg Dispatch: Justice Holmes, in denying the motion for a new trial, because it was too late, declares his doubt as to due process of law to be because of the threat of mob violence.

It thus appears that a man remains under sentence of death although the highest judicial authority, in passing on his case, doubts the full process of law by reason of the practical demand of a mob for his conviction. Justice is not always so particular against the granting of appeals. In Missouri a municipal spoilsman had his conviction vacated because the word "the" was omitted before the words "City of St. Louis." In Brooklyn a convicted bank president was released because a panel of jurors was drawn at 10 o'clock instead of 9. But in Atlanta it holds under sentence a man whose conviction was called for by a mob so threatening that the Judge conferred in Court with the Chief of Police and the Colonel of a militia regiment.

Certainly the case seems to illustrate the necessity of impressing on the highest judicial authority that the function of justice is to do justice, and not to enforce certain strict and invariable rules.

LIGHT BREAKS FOR FRANK.

Baltimore Star: Justice Holmes' opinion denying the writ of error, asked by counsel for Leo Frank, which would bring his case into the keeping of the Federal Supreme Court, would be disastrous to the widely entertained hope that a fair trial will yet be accorded this man, if it were not for the very important paragraph in the opinion in which this Associate Justice for the first time gives judicial cognizance of an emphatic sort to the known conditions prevailing in and around the courthouse during the trial of the accused, conditions which reached their culmination at the very moment when the jury was being polled by the Court. In that paragraph Justice Holmes said:

"I understand that I am to assume that the allegations of fact in the motion to set aside are true. On these facts I very seriously doubt if the petitioner (Frank) has had due process of law—not on the ground of his absence when the verdict was rendered so much as because of the trial taking place in the presence of a hostile demonstration and seemingly dangerous crowd, thought by the presiding Judge to be ready for violence unless a verdict of guilty was rendered."

Largely upon the strength of this statement of doubt, and notwithstanding the denial for a second time of relief for the convicted man by an individual Justice of the highest court, it is stated that the case will now be brought to the attention of the whole Court in regular session.

That Justice Holmes' expression gives ground for renewed hope that Frank will yet be enabled to face his accusers under circumstances making for a fair and impartial consideration of all the facts is not an illogical assumption.

SOCIETY

Belles and Beaux Have Become So Remiss in Answering Invitations That Hostesses, to Know for How Many They Must Provide, Have Solved Problem by Adopting an Old Small-Town Remedy.

By Frances Cabanne Scovel.

FOR several seasons past hostesses have been driven nearly frantic because they have not known until the last minute for how many guests to prepare, so remiss have the belles and beaux become about responding to their invitations.

The belles have blamed the beaux for "stagging it" instead of taking them, and the beaux have blamed — well, anything they happened to think of, so, at almost every dinner dance, especially last year, an extra table for about 15 or 20 persons had to be provisioned for those who MIGHT make up their minds to come without letting the hostess know.

You see, it is quite necessary, when giving a dinner dance at a club—and most dinner dances are given at clubs—for the hostess to know how many guests she is going to have, so she can tell the steward, for the food must be ordered.

They have even appealed to the society editor—the poor hostesses—thinking she might be able to help.

But now the hostesses have taken things in their own fair hands, and in every beau's invitation is inclosed the name of the girl he is expected to take to an affair and in every girl's invitation is the name of the man who is to take her. Shortly after receiving his cards, the man, if he can go, calls the girl by telephone and asks if he can be her escort and, when it is all arranged, they send their acceptances.

Should the man not be able to go, he lets his hostess know at once, so she can arrange for one of the "extra men" to take his place. How simple! Why did not someone here think of it before?

It has been causing quite a bit of talk and was supposed to be something entirely new—and smart—but it is really a small-town custom which has been in vogue for more than 10 years. Surely there is nothing new under the sun!

A SURE WAY TO END DANDRUFF

Stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp—At Once

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve, and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you value your hair, you should get rid of dandruff at once, for nothing destroys the hair so quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless, and everybody notices it.—ADV.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES A. STIX of 26 Portland place will give a small dinner dance this evening in honor of their daughter, Miss Winifred Stix, who made her first bow to society as one of the maids of honor at the Veiled Prophet's ball. She was graduated at Mary Institute last June but, instead of making her debut, as did many of her classmates, she entered Washington University and is continuing her studies and going to just the affairs she wishes.

Miss Helen Goldstein, the attractive daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Max A. Goldstein, who carried off the highest honors in her class at "Mary" last June, also is a student at Washington University.

Miss Stix and Miss Helen Glaser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sigmund Glaser of 42 Kingsbury place, are the only debutantes this season in the Columbian Club set, but next season will see Miss Marion Harris, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Harris, and several other girls of the fashionable Jewish circle making their bows.

FALLING HAIR AND DANDRUFF

For Four Years. Dandruff Could Be Seen Plainly. Head Burned and So Itchy Could Hardly Stand It. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Trouble Disappeared.

455 12th St., Detroit, Mich.—"I was troubled with falling hair and dandruff for about four years. The dandruff was very thick and my hair was always full of it. It could be seen plainly at times and whenever I would comb my hair it would come out pretty bad and my coat would be covered with it. Whenever I would scratch my head it would get red and leave little pimples. Then my head would burn and be so itchy that I could hardly stand it.

"I tried almost everything but with no result till one night I happened to think about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and thought I would try them. After using them about two weeks I found they were doing me so much good that I kept right on using the Cuticura Soap for washing my hair and the Cuticura Ointment for rubbing on my scalp. Now my hair is nice and thick and I am not bothered with any more dandruff or falling hair. The trouble has disappeared." (Signed) Roy Mittendorf, Jan. 31, 1914.

Samples Free by Mail

A single hot bath with Cuticura Soap and a gentle anointing with Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing cases of skin and scalp diseases when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

"FIE! FIE! FI-FI" PRINCETON PLAY HERE ON DEC. 28

Triangle Club With Football Stars in Girls' Parts to Show at King's Theater.

Princeton University's famous Triangle Club will present "Fie! Fie! Fi-fi!" at the King's Theater, 822 North King's highway, Monday night, Dec. 28.

The show's title sounds singy, and so it is; and it sounds girly, and so it is. That is, there are as many girl parts in the show as there are man parts. All the parts are filled by Princeton students, and Princeton isn't a "co-ed" school at present.

But the Trianglers says that female impersonation is the best thing they do. On their last visit to St. Louis, they relate, two of the "girls" in the show were seriously annoyed by stage-door Johnnies.

However, the men doing men's parts in the show furnish their full 50 per cent of the fun. No cadaverous, forlorn chorus men of uncertain age are these, but football heroes and baseball and track stars. William B. Moore of New York, who made the Tigers' first touchdown in the Yale game of three weeks ago; P. W. Foster, J. B. Given, P. B. Knowlton and C. H. Latrobe are representatives of the football squad in the men's chorus, and O. S. Putnam, captain and stroke of the varsity crew, is another member.

The men's chorus sings better, the show's managers say, but for dancing—well, the "girls" of the chorus will make chorus ladies of the Rose Stahl type seem a tame and insipid memory. High kicking and successful wearing of their costumes, which are real Fifth avenue "creations," are two of the "girls'" strong points.

are the gems of architecture. Nearly all the valuable works of the old masters are protected by law against exportation, and are tied up in Government collections. But that need not keep America from becoming the art center. Modern art, and not old masters, will be the determining factor.

"New York is, and was before the war, the world's best market for pictures. But what New York needs to establish its position in the art world is an annual international salon. In such a salon the world's best painters and sculptors would exhibit, and the art interest of Americans would be quickened. Other cities—St. Louis, Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia—would share in this general awakening and their art schools would grow in size and importance.

"The New York picture market has been built up in late years, by the importance given to American pictures. Two art dealers in New York several years ago had the courage to limit their trade to the works of Americans, and though they found the market poor at first, their faith in the merit of American artists was justified, and they established a trade which has grown ever since.

"Now, with this country the only art market of importance, buyers will have a selection of the works which formerly were offered to Germany and England. The likelihood is that America will be flooded with European paintings."

Miller was at his country home in Brittany, with his family, most of the time from the outbreak of war until his departure from France the middle of November. He is at the home of his father, R. L. Miller, 3806 Arsenal street, for the winter or for a longer time. Mrs. Miller is a painter, several of whose works have attained salon recognition.

Importations Not Parisian.

Miller says it is not true that the American art colony fled from Paris when the Germans were approaching the city in the late summer. They did not wait so long as that, he says, but left as soon as war was declared. Some went to England, more joined the home-hurrying hosts in the steerage.

Not having visited the United States since 1908, Miller was somewhat surprised at the cabaret shows and tango teas which he found in vogue in New York, and in the costumes which he found being worn by American womankind.

"They call it all Parisian," he remarked. "The dresses are Parisian, no doubt, but they are not worn by the sort of Parisian women whose presence would be acceptable in the American gatherings where their fashions are followed. As for the American cabaret and the tango luncheons, I don't recognize them as Parisian at all."

MARSHALL "ON THE JOB"

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—Vice-President Marshall took cognizance today of newspaper criticisms of his appearance on the lecture platform. He said:

"I do not think the people of the United States care whether I am paid for lecturing or not. I do believe they care whether I am on my job as presiding officer of the United States Senate while that body is in session. My duty to the United States calls for me to preside over the Senate. I was on the job when that body adjourned, and I shall be there when it convenes next Monday."

Christmas Entertainment Planned.

POSTOFFICE HAS SOME NEW RULES FOR CHRISTMAS

Brief Inscriptions Can Be Sent in Books and Added Directions Upon Wrappers.

The St. Louis Postoffice yesterday received Postamster-General Burleson's suggestions to the public, showing how Christmas parcels should be mailed.

These make it apparent that Uncle Sam has joined the "do your shopping early" movement, as the suggestions are headed with the injunction: "Mail Your Parcels Early." Official sanction also is given for the use on parcels of the caution: "Do not open until Christmas."

Put Address on Package.

Among other official suggestions is a warning that names and addresses of senders should be written on each package and also included in the package. The postoffices annually are confronted with the problem of disposing of thousands of parcels that have lost their tags or outer covering and bear nothing to identify the sender.

The suggestions point out that books or sets of books may now be sent by parcel post, packages weighing eight ounces or less taking a rate of 1 cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof. Regular zone rates apply above that weight.

Some Other Rules.

Following are additional official rules applying specifically to Christmas packages:

"You may insert in parcel mail written or printed inscriptions, such as 'Merry Christmas,' 'Happy New Year' or 'With Best Wishes.' Upno fly leaves of books you may write simple dedicatory inscriptions not of a personal nature. Other written additions or insertions subject a parcel to letter postage.

"If you desire a written communication to accompany your parcel, enclose it in an envelope, affixing first-class postage, and tie securely to outside of the parcel. Place the stamps to cover the postage of the parcel upon its wrapper and those to pay postage of the communication upon the envelope."

BARNARD CHOSEN HEAD OF PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION

Many Requests for Relief Lead to Effort to Obtain Fund of $100,000.

George D. Barnard of 35 Portland place, president of a printing firm and chief giver toward the establishing of the Barnard Skin and Cancer Hospital, has been elected president of the St. Louis Provident Association, it was announced yesterday. William K. Bixby was elected honorary president. The other officers elected were: Vice-president, Christian Bernet; secretary, Oscar L. Whitelaw; treasurer, A. O. Whilson; honorary vice-presidents, Rolla Wells, James Allen, Murray Carleton, Benjamin Gratz, Robert H. Stockton and Col. James Gay Butler.

Col. Butler is the retiring president of the association, having stipulated, when he accepted the office of president, that he should serve but one year.

New members added to the board were Mrs. B. B. Graham, M. L. Wilkinson, George A. Meyer, Benjamin Altheimer, William Lothman and A. J. Siegel. The other members of the board are: W. K. Bixby, Warren Goddard, Mrs. Philip N. Moore, J. Lionberger Davis, Edward Mallinckrodt, Francis G. Eaton, E. A. Faust, George Warren Brown, Charles P. Senter, Frank P. Hays, O. L. Whitelaw, Roger P. Annan, R. McKittrick Jones, H. F. Langenberger, Henry Elliott Jr., William Byrg, Christian Bernet, James G. Butler, George D. Barnard, Dwight Davis, J. D. Bascom, H. P. Knapp and Mrs. Perival Chubb.

The association is now having an unprecedented number of requests for relief. One day last week 159 families were aided, as compared with 23 on the same day last year. The officials of the association say the applicants for aid are of a better class than they were last year, but that they are destitute through unemployment.

To meet these greatly increased demands the asociation is trying to obtain a fund of $100,000, a little less than one-third of which has been subscribed. One man, after having subscribed $250, was asked to increase this to $500. He replied with a subscription of $1000. An addition of $1000 to the endowment fund has been received from the bequest of William Medart.

IGOE GOES TO CAPITAL

Will Ask Congress for More Funds for Revenue Office Here.

Congressman Igoe, accompanied by his secretary, J. J. Cochran, left St. Louis Friday for Washington where he will appear before the Committee on Appropriations. The annual appropriation for the next fiscal year will be fixed and Congressman Igoe will offer suggestions relative to the increase of appropriations in the Subtreasury and Internal Revenue offices in St. Louis.

Igoe will present figures showing that the business transacted in the St. Louis offices has greatly increased and a larger appropriation over last year is needed.

School Patrons to Meet.

The Tuxedo Parent-Teacher Association will have an evening meeting Friday at 8 p. m. at the Tuxedo Christian Church. Roger Baldwin, secretary of the Civic League, will speak on "Citizenship and the School." Evening meetings are to be held every third month to enable the fathers of the school children to attend.

English Beauty Tells Complexion Secrets

Through a fortunate meeting with an English lady, noted for her dazzling complexion, I recently learned the full meaning of that old adage, "Beauty is but skin deep." She taught me how to remove my muddy old skin, revealing the young and beautiful skin underneath. The process is so simple, harmless and inexpensive, I'm sure you'll be glad to know about it. Just get an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax at any drug store and apply nightly like cold cream, for a week or so. Every morning in washing off the wax, tiny particles of worn-out cuticle come off, too. The action is so gentle and gradual, there's no discomfort. It's a wonderful treatment, as it not only peels off the faded or discolored skin, but all of its defects, as chaps, roughness, freckles, pimples, blotches.

I am indebted to the same lady for a remarkable wrinkle-removing formula. One ounce powdered saxolite is dissolved in a half pint witch hazel. Used as a face bath, this is so effective that just one application causes the finer lines to disappear, and soon even the deepest ones go.—"Elise" in American Home.—ADV.

COUNCIL THINKS FEKETE'S TRIPS ARE TOO COSTLY

Eastside Aldermen Infer Attorney Could Have Ridden to Springfield Cheaper.

Expense accounts for three trips to Springfield, $15, $17 and $12, submitted to the Claims Committee of the East St. Louis City Council by City Attorney Thomas Fekete last night were refused as exorbitant.

The trips were made when Mayor Chamberlain, Fekete and Corporation Counsel Baxter were trying to withdraw their complaint on East St. Louis water rates before the Utility Commission.

The railroad fare from East St. Louis to Springfield is $4 a round trip. Fekete stayed one night in Springfield on each trip.

Fekete was angry at the committee's action. "I want to be economical with the city's money, but I can't afford to spend my own for purposes like that" he said today.

SLAYER OF TWO IS FREED

Des Moines Doctor Declared to Be Sane.

DES MOINES, Io., Dec. 5.—Dr. H. D. Kelley of Council Bluffs, who shot and killed Edmond Sterzing, a bartender, and Clarence Woolman, a Deputy Sheriff from Council Bluffs, here, about three years ago, was given his liberty today, when physicians, after an examination, declared him to be sane.

Practical Justice in Unofficial Clothes Line Court

"I agreed with due solemnity to see what I could do about it. The husband came to my office a few days later and we had a good laugh. 'Such a change as has come over my wife while I was away is beyond me,' he said. 'She don't go out anywhere unless she needs to, she attends strictly to her own business and so much affection, such attentions she showers upon me that I hardly recognize her as my own wife. I bet you it is the last time she ever needs to be arrested.' "

Came now the case of Potash vs. Brolaski, the latter identified in my sketch book as "the barber." For, from the carved and varnished curls of him, the fleckless overcoat, the brilliant shoes and, above all, the odor of him, I knew him at once as a barber. Back of him and over his shoulder peered an individual of wonderful self-assurance—that is, until the astute "judge" roared loud enough for everybody to hear—especially the reporter: "No politicians allowed in this court. Just disappear there, Micky."

Potash was not so easily classified as you might suppose, for he was fair-haired, blue-eyed and wore seedy-looking clothes.

"Well, what's troubling you, Potash?" asked the Judge, leaning back in his swivel chair in an attitude that dared anyone to present a case important enough to engage his interest.

"He hit me mit the hatchet in the head," responded Potash.

"Uh, huh. Split it wide open, I suppose?" sighed the Judge.

"No; didn't bother me at all. But mit the hatchet in the head he hit me."

"Well, what did you do to provoke the assault?"

"Nothings; just in the head mit the hatchet he hit me.'

The barber squirmed uneasily, but when it came his turn to testify he seemed to have lost the power of speech.

Potash then leaned forward within confidential distance of Mr. Seidel's ear, and said:

"All the trouble is, he admires my wife. My wife she speak only Yiddish. Been in this country dree monts. He say to her, what she stay mit me for, when so many stylish fellows they is, and I don't make a good living and dress stylish like him."

"I do not know his wife. I never speak to his wife," the barber protested, shaking hands and head. But the "Judge," alert, aroused to the fullest, all at once, rose up, even to the point of oratory, and such a lecture as he did give that barber. I wondered how he dared, for the barber was a rather husky looking chap himself. But the barber answered never a word, winced perceptibly at the sharper verbal cuts and seemed only too glad when permitted to escape, cowering and elbow on guard, from the room.

Brother Disturbed Her Company.

The next case also revealed the "Judge's" sympathy with wedded felicity and the courtships that lead to weddings.

A pale little girl came to report that the brother she had complained of previously for making himself objectionable when her suitors called, had been behaving himself very well; had, indeed, left home and not returned since he received his summons.

"Well, I'm going to have company tonight, and if he comes home and starts a rumpus I'll sure let you know." She had a sing-song voice and the mildest blue eyes. "He's an awful bad boy," she went on in a monotone. "A fellow came to see me the other night, and he said he sure thought he was going to spend a pleasant evening, but when he left he said he sure hadn't. I'm almost ashamed to have a fellow come to the house."

"If he shows up tonight and starts anything, you just let me know," said the Judge, soothingly.

"Alright, I sure will."

Next a bent but proud-looking old lady, white-haired, fine-featured, slight, decayed gentility written large upon her, hobbled over the threshold.

"Somebody's good old mother, come to grief. How sad!" thought I—until that "gentlewoman" opened her mouth.

Such a flow of language, such an avalanche, in fact. We hadn't been treated to such speed of repartee the whole afternoon.

The object of the defendant's attack (for she was the defendant in the case) was a mournful, long-faced old soul with a long upper lip, made longer by her present assumption of sorrow and humility.

The plaintiff managed at last, in the midst of the steady stream of words on the other side of the room, to make it known that the defendant had called her an "ould Republican."

"And do ye deny it? Ain't ye a soldier's widow, a-drawin' of a pension? Don't that prove it? And what did ye call me? And me a lady that was raised to have every luxury on my father's plantation. Didn't you snitch on me selling a bit of liquor on election day? And didn't you"——

"Oh, no," wailed the complainant. "I never snitched, Judge. I am not guilty of that action."

"And ye said I was drunk. When did you ever wait upon me when I was drunk? And how often did I wait on you when you was flat of your back? Yes, a fine neighbor you are, that would get up a petition to have me ejected, when I've lived in that yard 10 years."

"Judge, I was not guilty of that action."

"You was the chief instigator of it"——

"Don't talk," he implored. "Don't even speak to this woman again."——He pounded on the table. But the decayed "gentlewoman" was still talking all the way down the stairs, with her chin lifted haughtily, though her back was bent.

"Indeed, I should think it beneath my notice to speak to her again. I should consider it not worth while. Me, indeed; humph!"

The Judge and the complainant commiserated with each other a moment.

"I'm a respectable woman, sor. I was a servant in the family of"——

"Yes, yes; there, there. You'd better move into more refined surroundings."

She seemed mollified, but what balm to her soul 'twould have been if only the other old crone could have heard the Judge say that.

There were 21 cases in all. Through the majority ran the refrain, "She was my best friend until she turned against me," and "Her child was always picking on my little Henry,' etc., etc.

When out of patience with the courts for the snail's pace at which legal justice is known to move, you may gather from this narrative what becomes of some of the judiciary's time. Or, if you don't think such cases as these, which are fairly typical of many that come to police court, a waste of time, dignity and legal talent, perhaps you are of the opinion the city ought to go into the vaudeville business regularly.

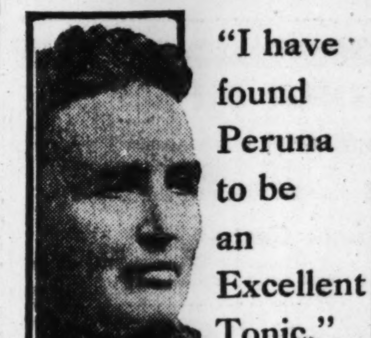
Peruna Will Stop That Cough



"I have found Peruna to be an Excellent Tonic."

Mrs. Perry, of 819 18th Avenue N. E., Minneapolis, Minn., is the wife of Commander Freeman G. Perry and well known in G. A. R. and society circles. She is the author of "Minnehaha Laughing Water." She says: "I have tried Peruna and found it an excellent tonic and cure for catarrh. It is good for all catarrhal affections of the stomach, and all diseases leading to consumption. Also for bronchial troubles. I believe it to be one of the best medicines on the market. Thousands can testify to its cure with the same pleasure that I can."

I Had the Grip.

Mr. C. Happy, Hardin, Ray Co., Mo., writes: "I can safely recommend Peruna as a remedy that will cure all catarrhal troubles. It was of great benefit to me as it cured me of catarrh of the throat, and I took a very bad cold and had la grippe last February. It settled in my throat and lungs. I took three bottles of Peruna, and it cured me. I highly recommend it to all who are sick, and I am glad to add my endorsement to that of others."

Another Case of Grip.

Mrs. Jane Gift, R. F. D. 1, Athens, Ohio, writes: "I think I would have been dead long ago if it had not been for Peruna. Six years ago I had la grippe very bad. The doctor came to see me every day, but I gradually grew worse. I told my husband I thought I would surely die if I did not get relief soon.

"I told my husband I wanted to try Peruna. He went directly to the drug store and got a bottle of Peruna. I could see the improvement in a very short time, and was soon able to do my work. I continued using it until I was entirely cured."

Do not stop a cough by taking depressants or opiates. A cough stopped that way will return.

Stop a cough by taking a tonic, like Peruna. This rids the system of the irritation that caused the cough.

Cough is an effort on the part of nature to clear the bronchial tubes. It is a mistake to stop a cough, except by assisting nature in clearing the tubes. Opiates and depressants simply numb the nervous system and the cough stops, leaving the poisonous and irritating materials in the bronchial tubes. This will soon affect the lungs. Let us stop the cough with Peruna, that strengthens and builds up and removes the irritation.

Catarrh of the Bronchial Tubes Chronic Cough

Mrs. Wm. Hohmann, 2764 Lincoln Ave., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I suffered with catarrh of bronchial tubes and had a terrible cough ever since a child.

"I would sit up in bed with pillows propped up behind me, but still the cough would not let me sleep. I thought and everybody else that I had consumption.

"So reading the papers about Peruna I decided to try, without the least bit of hope that it would do me any good. But after taking three bottles I noticed a change. My appetite got better, so I kept on, never discouraged. Finally I seemed not to cough so much and the pains in my chest got better and I could rest at night.

"I am well now and cured of a chronic cough and sore throat. I cannot tell you how grateful I am, and I cannot thank Peruna enough. It has cured where doctors have failed and I talk Peruna wherever I go, recommend it to everybody."

Those who object to liquid medicines can now procure Peruna Tablets. —ADV.

Bands Will Be Trained and Serenade Homes Where Candles Are Lighted.

"Silent Night" will be sung by bands of carolers on Christmas eve in St. Louis. The song is a petition for "Peace and Good Will on Earth."

Children are being organized by the Carol Committee of the Children's Aid Society, headed by Mrs. James M. Franciscus. These bands will include children of some of the most prominent families of the city, and almost every Sunday school. They will sing wherever a lighted candle is seen in the window of a house. The proceeds will be turned over to the Children's Aid Society, Mrs. George C. Hitchcock president.

High school students will sing Christmas carols daily at school, and many will take an active part in the singing Christmas eve. The high school bands will be trained by Edward L. Coburn, musical supervisor of the Board of Education.

FIRST REGIMENT'S PLAY TO BE GIVEN TWICE THIS WEEK

Gov. Major and His Colonels to Be Guests of Honor Tuesday Night.

Gov. Major, who will come to St. Louis Tuesday to witness the First Regiment's play at the Odeon that night, will sit in a box surrounded by the Colonels of his personal staff, who will be in military uniform. It will be "Military Night" in the Governor's honor. The second performance, Wednesday night, will be "Society Night," with Mayor Kiel as honor guest.

The regiment this year is presenting its fifth military play and this time has chosen "The Girl I Left Behind Me," written by David Belasco. It is a story of army life in Montana. The first act shows the parade ground, the second the barracks ballroom, the third portrays the siege of the fort by Indians and the fourth the officers' quarters in the fort the next day.

Col. Arthur B. Donnelly, commanding the regiment, has had to take the part of Maj. Burleigh, Twelfth U. S. Cavalry, because of the illness of the regiment's Adjutant, Capt. B. H. Dorcy, who had been assigned the role. Col. Donnelly's son, Arthur, will play the part of Maj. Burleigh's son.

Nine commissioned officers have speaking parts in the production, which is being staged by Frank Oakes Rose. The principals, besides Col. Donnelly and his son, are Miss Clara Niedringhaus, Miss Viola Goeke, Mrs. George W. Stewart, Mrs. Joseph Shafer, Maj. Richard E. Gruner, Captains E. J. McMahon, Geo. W. Stewart, John S. Braun, George B. Paxton, A. R. Sauerwein, Gunther Meier, Lieut. E. G. Mueller, Sergt. Alex McDonald and Private J. L. Moon. About 50 other members of the regiment will appear in the cast.

NEEDY EMPLOYED TO SEW FOR WAR SUFFERERS

Women Get Work Making Garments for the St. Louis Red Cross Committee.

The St. Louis Red Cross Women's War Relief Committee, in the Railway Exchange Building, is carrying on a work threefold in its benefits, for it is not only helping the destitute of Europe, but it is giving employment to St. Louis women and helping the needy here. As fast as money is donated, materials are bought in St. Louis and women are employed to make the garments for the soldiers and noncombatants of Europe and for the Provident Association of St. Louis. Hand sewers gets 75 cents a day and machine sewers $1 a day. The committee does not consider this living wages, but it is the best that can be paid under the circumstances, and there are many women to whom these amounts mean rent money and food.

All applications for employment must be made to the Provident Association, 2221 Locust street; St. Vincent de Paul Society, 413 South Fourteenth street; Young Women's Christian Association, Fourteenth and Locust, or the Jewish Educational Alliance, Ninth and Carr streets. Each organization investigates applications, and preference is given to those most in need of work. Hours for the paid workers are from 8:45 to 5:30 p. m., with an hour intermission at noon. Each paid worker is given a period of three days' employment.

Money is urgently needed now to buy materials and to employ women, and an appeal has been made for funds.

In addition to the paid workers, women from all parts of the city are doing volunteer work each day, and no matter how many paid workers are employed, there is always room for the volunteers. Each day of the week is in charge of a different chairman, and each chairman has 12 captains, each of whom has 10 aids.

All donations should be sent to the central office, sixteenth floor, Railway Exchange Building.

A report made of the work turned out for the first nine days follows: One thousand six hundred and twelve garments made for the noncombatants, which consisted of dresses, skirts, head shawls, mufflers and blouses; 290 garments for the hospitals, consisting of pajamas, nightshirts and convalescent robes. The report showed that 62 women had been employed for three days each, making 186 working days paid for by the Relief Committee.

DON'T BLAME YOUR MIRROR

Many ladies compel their mirrors to bear silent witness to needless hair destruction. Day after day they see beauty and attractiveness despoiled by the removal of great combfuls of slightly diseased hair that could be saved. If your mirror could talk it would plead with you to "save your hair—not the combings." It can be done with Newbro's Herpecide, which eradicates the contagion that causes dull, brittle and lusterless hair, also dandruff and falling hair. Correct this and the hair's natural luster and abundance will return. Almost extraordinary results. An exquisite hair dressing.

Send 10 cents in stamps to The Herpicide Company, Dept. 107B, Detroit, Michigan, for sample and booklet. Two Sizes—50 cents and $1.00. Sold and guaranteed at all Toilet Goods Counters. When you call for Herpicide, do not accept a substitute. Applications at prominent Barber Shops.

Timely and Interesting News of the Theatrical World

Maude Adams Now at Her Womanly Best—Let's Hope She Will Remain True to Sex

Favorite American Actress' Feminine Charm So Potently Exerted This Season and Last That It Constitutes Powerful Argument Against Any Future Essayal of Masculine Roles—Another Glimpse at Premiere Productions in New York's Mimic World.

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS.

By the great good fortune due to the termination of my annual playgoing visit to New York, on Saturday, one week ago, I was enabled to return to St. Louis in time to see Maude Adams' opening performance in "The Legend of Leonora" and "The Ladies' Shakspeare" at the Olympic last Monday night, a performance which now justly has taken its place among the most distinguished events of the St. Louis theatrical season.

If the plans originally laid by Charles Frohman had proved feasible, a simultaneous London and New York premiere production of "The Legend of Leonora" would have been made in November of last year, and I then should have seen Maude Adams in the name part of this Barrie play at the Empire Theater during my 1913 visit to the metropolis. At the last moment, however, it was found necessary to change these plans. The London premiere of "The Legend of Leonora" took place on schedule time, but it was not until January of the present year that New York playgoers saw Miss Adams in this curious and whimsically charming comedy.

Nevertheless, all's well that ends well, and what most delighted me at the St. Louis first-night of the Barrie double bill was its comforting proof that Maude Adams, both in "The Legend of Leonora" and "The Ladies' Shakspeare" is fitted to perfection with purely feminine roles that reveal her delicate art at its womanly best, far more satisfyingly, in certain essentials, than was possible even to the Maggie Shands of her immediately precedent playing in "What Every Woman Knows." As for her earlier manful endeavor in the title role of "Chantecler"—well, as I told you at the time, that was a tremendous disappointment to me, because not at any moment did she realize this inherently masculine role, created with such lusty bravado by Lucien Guitry in the Paris premiere of Edmond Rostand's barnyard and forest allegory. It was not Maude Adams' fault that her Chantecler should be utterly lacking in plausibility and convincingness. Old Mother Nature, in making her one of the most demure and dainty of feminine creatures, sternly forbade the unsexing of her gentle being to the extent necessary for the proper playing of this hardy, virile and struttingly vaingloriouus part.

With the picturesque Liebler production of "The Garden of Paradise" at the Park Theater in New York City just eight nights ago the list of this season's notable new play offerings virtually is closed and nothing more of first-class importance may be expected until after the sweet chiming of Old Trinity's bells shall have ushered in a New Year of yet indefinite promise.

As I told the Post-Dispatch's readers in my special-wire messages from New York, this poetic and spectacular play by Edward Sheldon, based on Hans Christian Andersen's fairy story entitled "The Little Sea Maid," constitutes the biggest and most ambitious production ever made by the Liebler company, already famous for the daring prodigality and sound art with which they distinguish the worthiest plays of their choosing. "The Garden of Allah," "The Daughter of Heaven" and "Joseph and His Brethren" are particularly memorable examples of such productions, and these, it will be recalled, were made on the vast stage of the Century—formerly the New—Theater, built by a group of New York multimillionaires at a cost of some $3,000,000, with probably the most complete equipment of any playhouse in the world. Now, however, at the Park Theater, which, while one of the biggest in New York, nevertheless does not equal the Century in size or equipment, they have surpassed all their earlier achievements and, beginning with the great opening-night triumph itself, have scored their most undeniable success. Not since "The Blue Bird" of exquisite memory has New York seen a series of vast stage paintings so bewilderingly beautiful or enjoyed a dramatic story so tenderly told. Edward Sheldon has risen with sincere inspiration to the high task of properly shaping a Hans Christian Andersen folk-tale of a more childlike generation into a play for present-day seeing, and, although pitted against Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet-dramatist, by the inevitable comparison of "The Garden of Paradise" with "The Blue Bird," his work stands the comparison well.

In pictorial loveliness it even surpasses the New Theater production of the Maeterlinck play, long held to be unsurpassable in sheer beauty.

The Hans Christian Andersen story is simplicity itself. It tells us, you may remember, of the strange fortunes of Swanhild, the beautiful Mermaid Princess who, on her fifteenth birthday, was permitted to mount to the world above her home in ocean's depths and who there saw and loved a handsome young prince of earth, for whose sake, through the magic of the Sea Witch, she herself was transformed into a human girl and provided with a love-potion for the winning of the Prince's heart. Haplessly, however, this Prince loved and married a mortal maiden, and then, despite the fact that, being a mermaid, she had never been provided with a soul, poor little Swanhild, because of her great and unselfish love, was taken up into Paradise by the pitying angels who had come to love her for the constancy and sacrificial purity of her own love.

This sweet story is exquisitely told in Edward Sheldon's play, and its action is illustrated by an almost incredible richness in scenic environment. Notable among the many big stage pictures are the Princess Swanhild's "coming-out ball" under the sea, attended, among other strange guests, by her submarine suitors, Turtle Rajah, the Prince of the Jellyfish and the Emperor of the Crabs; the ocean shipwreck in which Swanhild saves the life of the young Prince whom she loves; the scene on the seashore near a convent, where the Girl-Queen of the Southland, later the wife of the young Prince, is encountered with her maids of honor, gathering flowers; the weirdly impressive under-ocean picture of the Sea Witch brewing the potion that changes Swanhild from a mermaid into the seeming of a mortal maid, and, finally, the flight of angels to Paradise, bearing with them Swanhild the soulless, whose heartbreak has so moved their own pure souls to the profoundest pity.

"LITTLE CAFE" IS NOW TO BE SEEN ON OLYMPIC STAGE

"The Blue Bird" at Shubert—Premiere of "The Quicksands" at the Park.

"THE LITTLE CAFE." Olympic. Musical comedy, its book and lyrics by C. M. S. McLellan, its music by Ivan Caryll, adapted from a French farce by Tristan Bernard, which enjoyed a remarkable vogue in Paris and London. The musical comedy version scored a big New York success.

Its story deals with the adventures of Albert Loriflan, a happy-go-lucky waiter in a little Paris cafe frequented chiefly by light-hearted denizens of Montmartre. Loriflan falls heir to 1,000,000 francs, a legacy from a titled kinsman Gigredon, a promoter, who knows of his good fortune before the news gets to Loriflan himself, and Philibert, proprietor of the Little Cafe, evolve a scheme by which they hope to trick Loriflan out of part of his legacy. They persuade him to sign a contract to continue as a Little Cafe waiter for 20 years or forfeit 300,000 francs. Loriflan, being in love with Philibert's beautiful daughter, Yvonne, readily falls into their trap. But he then fools them, after receiving his million francs, by remaining as a Little Cafe waiter, devoting his nights only to the gay life of Paris, which his money enables him to enjoy. Such dissipation, however, makes him a very sluggish waiter by day, and he is rapidly driving custom away from the Little Cafe. Many complications are born of this situation, and the play's action is full of fun from start to finish.

John E. Young, a great St. Louis favorite, will be seen in his original role of Albert Loriflan, the waiter-millionaire, in which he won brilliant Broadway triumphs. In its 31 speaking parts the cast includes Joseph Monahan, Marjorie Gateson, H. P. Woodley, Alma Francis, Harry Depp, a native St. Louisan, and many other clever people. A picturesque scenic production is promised.

"THE BLUE BIRD." Shubert. Return engagement of beautiful spectacular presentation of Maurice Maeterlinck's poetic fairy play, the original New York production being announced. When first produced at The New Theater in the metropolis this play ran for 268 nights and, since then, has scored great successes on tour. It also has achieved notable triumphs in Paris, London, Petrograd (St. Petersburg), Berlin and Melbourne.

The big cast of 100 players is headed by Jack Davis as Tyltyl, the boy hero of its story, and little Harriet Mendel as Mytyl, its tiny girl heroine. Among the older members of the company encountered during the strange wanderings of Tyltyl and Mytyl in both the real world and the fairy realms of fancy are Thomas K. Corless as the Cat; Gwendolyn Valentine as Water; Isabelle LePage as Milk; John Sutherland as Bread; George Sylvester as Sugar; Henry Duggab as Tyle, the faithful dog; R. Morgan and Ethel Brandon, as Daddy Tyl and Mammy Tyl; Elizabeth Evans as the Fairy Berylume; Angelo Romeo as Fire; Dora Davidson as Father Time and Martha Messenger as beatuiful Light, who guides the boy and girl in their quest of the Blue Bird, the symbol of happiness.

Many children, besides the two little principals, appear in the production, now as figurative Hours and Happiness, again as little brothers and sisters of the hero and heroine, and as the Unborn Children of the Kingdom of the Future.

"TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE." American. Return engagement, and now presented for the first time at popular prices, of Eugene Walter's picturesque play made from John Fox Jr.'s powerfully dramatic novel of life in the Cumberland Mountains feudbelt. Isabelle Lowe plays the role of June Tolliver, originally created by Charlotte Walker, and is said to have scored memorable successes in the part, which is that of a primitive mountain girl whose fierce kinsmen are vital factors in the vendetta feud long existing between the Tollivers and another mountain clan. Other characters, such as Dave, jealous cousin of June; grim Judd Tolliver, her father; Uncle Billy Bean and Ole Hun, his quaint wife; the strong and manly Hale, the story's young engineer-hero in love with June, and Berkley, his friend, are said to be in capable hands.

An impressive scenic production is announced.

"THE QUICKSANDS." Park. First production on any stage of new play by Lewis B. Ely of St. Louis. The work is described as a serious drama of high political life, dealing with the "eternal triangle" in a new way, and, while offering no preachment, telling a powerful dramatic story in a clean-cut, vigorous and effective manner.

Playwright Ely is a St. Louis newspaper man, author of "Tar and Feathers," a play produced with distinction at Suburban Garden Theater several years ago; also of "Young Love and Old Hate," a novelette published in Lippincott's about the same time, and, as well, he has written other widely read magazine stories. He is a member of the Country Club, the Racquet Club and the Artists' Guild, and also well known in St. Louis society, a son of the late Frank Ely, who was senior partner in the firm of Ely, Walker & Co., later the Ely-Walker Dry Goods Co., and it is expected that there will be a brilliant social representation at the Park Theater during the week's engagement of his new play.

The Park management will make an elaborate production of "The Quicksands," its staging being under the direction of Charles Sinclair, for many years a producer for Charles Frohman, Florenz Ziegfeld, the Shuberts, Henry W. Savage and others, both in this country and abroad. The play was written by Mr. Ely with a special view to its Park presentation by The Players, who are effectively cast for its performance. Mitchell Harris will be seen as a young architect in love with a Governor's beautiful daughter, this latter role being entrusted to Marion Ruckert. Henry Hull is cast as the Governor, John Maurice Sullivan as a Judge of the Supreme Court, Eda von Buelow as his erring wife, and Carson Davenport, Elsa Rendel, Robert McClung, Leonora Bradley, Louis Calhern and Anna Berger Price also are promisingly placed.

"THE YANKEE PRINCE." Shenandoah. George M. Cohan's funniest musical comedy, excellently presented by the Park Opera Company, which scored a big success in this offering at the Park Theater last week. Roger Gray, leading comedian; Louise Allen, soubrette; Phillips Tead, light comedian of The Players and now essaying musical comedy with brilliant results; George A. Natanson and other favorites in the company are seen and heard to advantage.

VAUDEVILLE. Columbia. Bill headed by Valeska Suratt and company in a new version of "Black Crepe and Diamonds" and "The Moth and the Flame," giving Miss Surat especially rich opportunity for a display of numerous beautiful gowns.

VAUDEVILLE. Grand. Bill headed by Jack Trainor and company in a big musical-farce surprise entitled "Watch Your Step," presenting Trainor as Henry Schultz, a jolly German pickle merchant.

VAUDEVILLE. Hippodrome. Bill headed by "The Song Festival," introducing five soloists, and the celebrated Berne Troupe, presenting a thrilling act illustrating Lapland methods of self-defense.

"THE LIBERTY GIRLS." Princess. Company headed by Matt Kennedy, presenting an opening extravaganza entitled "The Alimony Club," introducing a burlesque on "The Mikado;" a closing sketch entitled "The Troubles of Adolph," and a star vaudeville olio, featuring the Flying Sherwoods in their "Leaping Through Space" act.

"THE HEART CHARMERS." Standard. Musical burlesque, the company headed by Charles Howe as Moses Cohen, a Hebrew "sport," supported by Mildred Stoller and other clever people, with Odivio and her Twenty Swimming Girls as an added attraction.

"THE MIDNIGHT MAIDENS." Gayety. Musical burlesque, the company including Nat Young, impersonator and comedian; Zalla Clayton, prima donna; Miss Martin, soubrette; Babe La Belle, Oriental dancer, and others. Wednesday night, "tryout" acts; Friday, amateurs; open to all comers applying at the box office.

PHOTOPLAYS. Strand. First-run films, changing daily. "The Mystery of the Sea View Hotel" is today's topliner. The fourth episode of "The Master Key" tomorrow.

GERMAN MOVING PICTURES. Garrick. Engagement continued for another week, all performances being for the benefit of the war sufferers, the money turned over to the German Consul in St. Louis, to be forwarded to Count von Bernstorff, German Ambassador at Washington.

PHOTOPLAYS. New Grand Central. "The Greyhound," starring Paul Armstrong, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. "The Better Man," starring William Courtleigh, Wednesday to Saturday.

PHOTOPLAY. Juniata. Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower," Sunday afternoon and evening and Monday.

PHOTOPLAY. West End Lyric. "The Ghost-Breaker," starring H. B. Warner in his original New York creation of the title role.

HARVARD MUSICAL CLUBS COME ON NEW YEAR'S EVE

Famous Glee, Mandolin and Banjo Stars in Great Concert for Benefit of Belgian War Sufferers—Brilliant Society Event.

On New Year's eve, Dec. 31, marking the close of the twelvemonth that has brought the world catastrophe of the great war now desolating Europe, the Harvard Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Clubs will appear in concert at the Odeon, the entire proceeds of their present tour of nine American cities to be given to the Red Cross Society for the relief of the Belgian war sufferers, the innocent and most pitiable victims of the bloody conflict that has found its fiercest fighting ground on Belgium's soil.

This event will emphasize in a peculiarly striking manner the rigidly neutral spirit of Harvard University, which, as the American public will remember, sturdily and quite properly refused to ask for the resignation of Prof. Hugo Munsterberg of its faculty, Germany's chief advocate and champion in this country, even under the threat of the loss of a promised bequest of $10,000,000 if Prof. Munsterberg were retained as a member of its teaching organization.

The three famous musical clubs of Harvard now come to St. Louis with the additional prestige born of the winning of new honors of uncommonly memorable value, the Glee Club especially distinguishing itself in this respect.

Harvard Club's New Triumphs.

On May 9 last, at the Intercollegiate Glee Club meet in New York City, constituting a competitive concert unique in American college annals, in which the Harvard, Dartmouth, Columbia and Pennsylvania University glee clubs took part, Harvard unanimously was awarded the prize by a committee of three authoritatively qualified judges.

The past year, indeed, takes its station as one of the most successful in the history of the Harvard musical clubs and is especially marked by attractive innovations.

Among these was the first dual concert ever held with the Princeton clubs, which was given in Princeton on the eve of the annual football game; the dual concert with Dartmouth at Hanover, the first Dartmouth concert ever held outside of Boston, and the Glee Club concert with the Radcliffe Choral Society, held in Sanders Hall, Cambridge, at which none but classical pieces was sung.

The Harvard Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Davison, has established and maintained ideals far above those of the average college organization and has reached an unusual degree of development, bearing favorable comparison with the achievements of many professional societies.

The three Harvard musical clubs, composed of 50 men selected on a competitive basis from about 200 candidates, are making their present tour, the itinerary covering the cities of Syracuse, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Detroit, in special cars—two Pullmans, a baggage car and a dining car, all of which they retain during the entire tour.

They are accompanied by two managers and the "coach" of the mandolin and banjo clubs, the sole duty of the latter being to keep the instruments in shape and to tune them every evening.

It now is more than likely that, under the supervision of Mr. Dwight Davis of St. Louis, members of the Harvard Glee Club will take part in the New Year festival at the Municipal Christmas tree on Twelfth street, thus contributing a notably attractive feature to that picturesque celebration.

Society Will Honor Harvard.

The Harvard clubs will be much entertained while in St. Louis, at receptions, smokers, dances and other hospitable functions, and the period of their visit will be made socially brilliant above the average. The Harvard faculty permits the clubs to make this Christmas and New Year's tour every other year, alternating between the West and South so that the same territory is covered only once in four years.

Full details of the program and of the many entertainments being arranged in honor of the Harvard clubs will be announced later. Tickets for their New Year's eve concert will be on sale at the Famous-Barr Co.'s boxoffice 10 days before the concert date. The list of St. Louis patronesses of the Harvard Musical Clubs is:

NEWMAN TRAVELTALK ON "FRANCE AND THE WAR"

E. M. Newman's fourth traveltalk at the Odeon next Thursday evening will be "France and the War." He was on the Continent last summer, and took many pictures of the startling activities following the declarations of war. Of even greater interest to his public, however, is the arrangement he was able to make, whereby his assistant remained abroad, and at weekly intervals is sending him realistic motion pictures of actual scenes and incidents at the front and in the wake of the armies.

This week's journey begins with a portrayal of the manifold beauties and attractions on the Riviera and continues through the picturesque valley of the Rhone to Paris and then to the war-ravaged sections of the French Republic and Belgium.

PAVLOWA APPEARS NEXT WEEK IN FINE PROGRAM

Anna Pavlowa and her Imperial Russian Ballet will appear at the Odeon on Monday afternoon and evening, Dec. 14, in a program of unusual beauty, novelty and picturesque attractiveness.

In addition to such ballets as "Coppelia," "Gisella" and "La Fille mal Gardee," which she has made standard works, Mlle. Pavlowa will present six new ballets and 10 divertissements. With M. Ivan Clustine, her dancing partner, she will be seen in her three new social dances, "The Pavlowana," "The Pavlowa Waltz" and "The Gavotte Pavlowa."

The new dances will be presented with the accompaniment of the three musical compositions selected in a competition open exclusively to American composers, the winners of the Pavlowa cash prizes of $1,500 being Philip I. Jacoby, Collaborators Henry B. Ackley and Henry Auerbach, and Edward C. Moore. An additionally effective feature of this modern ballroom scene will be the appearance of every dancing membe of the Pavlowa company in fu evening dress.

The classical and romantic ballets and divertissements include "Walpurgis Night," from Gounod's "Faust;" "Peppen-Fee" ("The Fairy Doll"); "Amarilla," "Flora's Awakening" and "The Sevent Daughters of the Ghost King." The two first named, although given in this country some years ago, now are virtually new, and the three others are seen in St. Louis as in other American cities this season for the first time.

The dances will be presented with the additional feature of a special symphony orchestra under the direction of Theodore Stier, conductor of the London Classical Orchestra, and the musical scores are by the world's famous composers. Impressive scenic and costume productions are announced.

More than 350,000 women signed the suffrage petition which was rejected by the Swedish Parliament.

How Thin People Can Put on Flesh

A New Discovery

Thin men and women—that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and funny sawdust diets. Omit the flesh cream rub-ons. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of those a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay-there" fat should be the net result. Sargol charges your weak, stagnant blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—gives the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food and prepares it for the blood in easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 25 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a scientific combination of six of the best flesh-producing elements known to chemistry. They come 40 tablets to a package, are pleasant, harmless and inexpensive, and Judge & Dolph Drug Co.'s 3 stores, Weipert Drug Co., Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., Johnson-Enderle-Pauley Drug Co.'s 5 stores and all other druggists in St. Louis and vicinity sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.—ADV.

SERVICE BOARD TO BE ASKED TO ACT ON SUBWAY

Councilman Hines to Offer Resolution When Parkway Bill Is Passed Upon.

WOULD LEARN THE COST

He Wants Engineers to Figure on Tunnel From Grand Avenue to City Limits.

The Board of Public Service will be asked to take definite steps toward the creation of a city-owned subway for street cars, part of it to be depressed tracks in the center of the proposed traffic parkway, in a resolution to be offered by Councilman John Hines when the parkway bill is acted upon by the Council.

"I read what the Post-Dispatch published in outlining a subway from Grand avenue to Fourth street, which is said to be the plan of the Kiel administration," said Hines to a reporter. "It seems to me that the time to plan a subway system has arrived, and our engineering experts should be asked to get busy on the problem, so that we may know at an early date what it will cost, where it should extend, and many other important details."

Hines said he would offer his resolution at the meeting at which the Council will enact the parkway bill. The resolution will ask not only for estimates and suggestions regarding a subway loop downtown and depressed tracks along the parkway, but will ask also for estimates and plans on a tunnel or depression extending to the western city limits.

Would Make It Time-Saver.

Richard McCulloch, general manager of the United Railways Co., in an interview published yesterday by the Post-Dispatch, said it would not be worth while to construct a rapid transit subway ending at Grand avenue, because street cars could only reduce the running time from the limits to the business district about eight minutes.

Commenting on McCulloch's statement, Councilman Hines said he would ask the Service Board to recommend a subway route of sufficient length to enable a great saving in time by the public. McCulloch said he had never employed engineers to plan a subway system for the United Railways, but would gladly co-operate with city officials in an investigation of the subject.

Hines said the idea of utilizing the traffic parkway for rapid transit street car service appealed to him. He said the planning of a subway connected with the parkway should be carried on while the condemnation commissioners are at work on the parkway, in order that the subway scheme would be decided upon by the time the city is ready to take over the 21 city blocks on which it will raze buildings. For this reason he will offer a resolution when the parkway bill is passed by the Council.

Tentatively Approved by Mayor.

Mayor Kiel and President Kinsey say they have no subway plan under consideration at the present time, but it was learned from those who know the administration's plans, that the parkway depression and downtown loop have been tentatively approved by Mayor Kiel as part of the legislative program before he retires from office, nearly two years from now.

The City Plan Commission, according to Walter B. Stevens, secretary, has not studied the subway problem through its former traffice expert, Maxime Reber. Reber reported to the commission several months ago that he considered the traffic subway in St. Louis to be a remote undertaking, and therefore did not analyze its possibilities while he was employed as traffic expert.

All of these pieces of furniture are rich and beautiful in design—made of solid oak in natural finish, showing the beautiful grain of the wood. The workmanship is of the highest order—and every piece will give the utmost service and satisfaction.

The Upholstering
The Divan-Bed Davenport, Arm Chair and Arm Rocker are richly upholstered in a fine quality of imitation leather—a fabric that looks exactly like genuine leather—and will wear even better when put to the test of actual wear—as it will never peel, crack or rub as real leather often does.

The Divan-Bed Davenport
Is made on the new principle—the springs, mattress and bedding are under the seat and come into position when the seat is turned. Has a set of comfortable bed-springs which support the mattress when the Davenport is open as a bed.

The Library Table
This handsome piece of furniture matches the balance of this outfit—it is made of solid oak, in massive Mission design—has 24x36-inch top—roomy drawer and large lower shelf for books and magazines—the very table you would select above all others to go with this Parlor Set.

The Art Lamp
Is a real beauty—has heavy brass standard—art glass shade mounted in solid brass—and is fitted for gas (with tubing) or for electricity (with cord)—and gives the finishing touch of elegance to this outfit.

Stop and consider what each of these pieces would cost you if bought separately—and you will readily see that we are offering you a $70 outfit for only $45—and the terms of payment are equally pleasing—all you pay is $2.50 cash and $2.50 a month. Take advantage of the opportunity.

The Quail Season

BY CLARK M'ADAMS

THE quail season in Missouri opened on last Tuesday and continues for 31 days. This gives us 11 months in which to pick the shot out of ourselves and consider whether we can afford to keep our dogs. There is such a thing as being a quail hunter and not having a dog, but in such a case what one generally brings home is rabbits. Properly to hunt quail one must have a dog and must keep it through 11 months of the year reasonably immune from deteriorating influences. That is, it must not be poisoned. The average St. Louis sportsman for this reason keeps his dog in the country. There is more tolerance for dogs in the country, and poison is not sold in so many places. At any rate, one brings his dog in the first of December, and goes quail shooting. This is with us a sport which is about what grouse shooting is in England. The only difference is that instead of being propagated on large game preserves by the rich, as the game is in England, quail are raised by the farmer and are shot at by the farmer's boy until the chance of hitting one is rendered slim enough to invite friends out from town. There is some difference of opinion among farmers and hunters with respect to the ownership of quail. Farmers contend that inasmuch as they raise them on their places and protect them from a great many perils, they ought to have them to shoot. The hunter doesn't quite see that. He is disposed to believe that they are fair game which merely takes refuge on the farmer's place because he is usually not a very good shot, and the disagreement arising from these opposing views may be said to be the spice of quail shooting. It is at any rate its chief excitement. It is not beyond credence that some farmers only keep quail on their places for the exercise they get chasing hunters off.

I WAS in Jefferson City two years ago when the present quail law was framed. There were at that time two camps in the State capital—one for stopping the shooting of quail altogether for a term of years, and another for shooting them as they had been shot in formers years. There was more excitement over this division on a subject of which most people heard nothing, than there was over anything in the administration platform. Senator Wilson, a traditional foe of quail shooting in Missouri, succeeded in getting through the upper branch of the Legislature a bill prohibiting quail shooting for three years. That sentiment chiefly came from north of the Missouri River. The quail have disappeared very rapidly there. The wire fence, which leaves no corners of weeds and grass, has been the last great enemy to take the field against them. There is in a clean farming country almost no cover for quail. Exposed as they are, they not only fall into the clutches of hunters and hawks, but what is even more destructive, they lack that warmth of wood and weed which would protect them from the bitter cold. Quail freeze very readily in open country. Kansas, a great quail State, lost so many of her quail in the severe winter of 1911-12 that she has now a closed term of several years in order to give the birds a chance to recover. The cold winds of winter are the arch enemy of quail in all the prairie states, as they are in the more open parts of Missouri. In Southern Missouri the need for protection is not so great, and it was that part of Missouri which beat the Wilson bill in the House. There is a great deal of wild land and waste land in the southern half of Missouri. There are brier patches from the deep shelter of which quail can make faces at hawks or hunters.

WHAT the Legislature finally did with the quail law was to reduce the open season to the single month of December and lower the bag limit to ten and fifteen birds—10 in a day and 15 in possession. This was a blow to many Missouri hunters. It seemed absurd to keep bird dogs and make a long trip out into the State to bring home 15 quail. Fifteen quail just about fill an overcoat pocket. They are about the easiest game to get home we have in this State. One could fairly carry them in one's cap. Mr. Jesse B. Jones, the State Game Commissioner, who was in town this week, tells me he is going to try to have the quail season changed from Nov. 10 to Dec. 10. He thinks the latter part of December an unfortunate season to hunt quail in Missouri. If it is cold, and it usually is cold at that time, one kills fewer quail than are frightened out of shelter and subsequently freeze. It is unlikely that there will be any increase made this winter in the number of quail one may kill. Indeed, sportsmen are coming around pretty fast in these days to the support of what are known as tight game laws. If they could only have had water in Missouri this fall they would have owed to the Federal law against spring shooting one of the best duck seasons in many years. The Government supplied the ducks. They went down the Mississippi Valley in clouds. Every shooting ground with water on it was infested by ducks. The trouble as a whole was that the Government did not supply water where there was none, nor did the ducks bring any with them. The small bag limit on quail in Missouri is a life saver for the quail. That is, of course, if the farmer's son doesn't get to hitting them. Once that happens, and there will be an end to Bob White. It is hard to restrain the farmer's son. If we could get him in the army at a tender age, we might solve the problem by giving him something else to shoot at. But we don't know whether Congressman Gardner is going to succeed in having anything done about the army yet.

QUAIL occur in corn or weeds and fly into thickets. It is in the thickets that most of the hunting is done. Making sure that one's companion is where one would probably hit him with thirty or forty shot in case one's gun went off accidentally, it is customary to plunge in through brier and brake and get the quail moving. They move with a great whirr of wings, and usually keep a thick bush or a grape vine between themselves and the hunter until they get well out of range. There is always, in a quail-hunting party, a member whose health does not permit him to do much burrowing through blackberry briars. This gentleman takes up a position on a stump at the edge of the thicket and shoots the quail as they fly out. Occasionally one shoots one himself in the course of getting them out, but that doesn't matter. Having the advantage of seeing where the bird fell, the man on the stump gets him. This member of the party is known as the prince and the other members are known as the bushbeaters. It is the duty of the bushbeaters to drive the quail out where the prince can get them, whether he kills them or not. The organization along these lines is sometimes unconscious, but there is almost never any deviation from it. There is also in every quail-hunting party what is known as the claimer. The claimer is the fellow who kills what falls when everybody shoots. Thus, a covey of quail rising before three men and two quail falling, the claimer exclaims: "I got two!" He does get them, too. Sometimes there is a pugnacious member of the party who wrestles him for them, but usually the claimer is a big man taking advantage of his size, and he keeps the birds. It is a fine sport—quail shooting. One goes, say, into the Ozarks and starts home with his 15 birds. On the way back the porter takes ten, leaving you five. One can sit up all night and get home with more, but not if one naps easily. It takes much less time to grab a quail off a game strap than it does to kill one. Moreover, the porter never sleeps. He only shams.

Irishman Surprised to Learn Nose Was Longer Than His Arms

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.

THE topic at one of the hotel lobby talkfests the other night turned to surprises. Congressman Charles H. Burke of South Dakota was reminded of the experience of a certain Irishman named Pat.

Pat hurriedly jumped out of bed one night in response to an alarm of fire, and with both arms extended he cautiously felt around in the darkness for an open door. Of course, it so happened that an arm went on either side of the aforesaid door, with the result that Pat violently bumped his nose on the edge of it.

"Shure, an' it's some surprised thot Oi am!" answered Pat. "It's the furrest toime Oi iver knowed thot me nose was longer than me arrums."

'Hampy' Moore Likened to Mars Because He's So Full of Canals

CONGRESSMAN "HAMPY" MOORE of Pennsylvania is often referred to as "the father of the waterways." Rivers, harbors, canals and dredging matters are as predominant in his conversation as is hash at a boarding house.

His colleague, Congressman G. W. Edmonds, met Moore the other day.

"Do you know, Moore," he asked, "why it is you remind me of Mars?"

Moore avowed his inability to see any relation.

Baltz's Friend Saw Man Being Beaten, Thought It Movie Act

CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM N. BALTZ of Belleville, Ill., told this one when someone mentioned the subject of false impressions:

A constituent named Smith, as a witness, described a fight very graphically.

"Do you mean to say, sir," severely remarked the Judge, "that you saw the plaintiff pursued; that you saw him thrown to the ground and beaten with a piece of lead pipe?"

"Yes, sir,' answered Smith. "I thought they was takin' pictures for the movies."

MONUMENT COST $23,000

Constructed of Vermont Granite and Is 30 Feet High—Julian Zolnay, Sculptor.

The stately Confederate monument, erected by contributions gathered by the St. Louis chapters of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, was unveiled in Forest Park yesterday afternoon in the presence of about 500 persons.

The exercises preceding the unveiling were held in the Jefferson Memorial. The monument is a half-mile southeast of the Memorial building.

The bravery of the 200,000 Confederate soldiers who laid down their lives in the Civil War for the cause they believed to be right was eulogized by Gen. Bennett H. Young of Louisville, commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans. The 600,000 Southern men who served under the Confederate flag fought with bitter determination to win, Gen. Young said, and the beautiful monument was a fitting tribute to their memory.

The First Regiment band played "Maryland, My Maryland" at the opening of the exercises. The Rev. James W. Lee delivered the invocation and an address of welcome was delivered by Dr. R. C. Atkinson. Gen. Seymour Stewart also spoke, and Mrs. Mary Fairfax Childs read a poem on the Confederacy.

Following the exercises at the Jefferson Memorial, the audience marched through the park to the monument. Alexander H. Major Jr., president of the Betty S. Robert Chapter of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, and Dean McDavis, president of the Robert E. Lee chapter, pulled the cords which drew the veil from the monument. The band played "Dixie" and the men removed their hats and cheered.

Emil Tolkacz, Director of Public Welfare, representing Mayor Kiel, spoke briefly after the unveiling and said the monument would stand forever as a memorial to the bravery of the Southern soliders. Mrs. H. N. Spencer, president of the Monument Association, delivered an address presenting the monument to the city.

The monument was erected at a cost of $23,000, the money having been raised by the Daughters of the Confederacy. George Julian Zolnay was the sculptor and Wilbur T. Trueblood, the architect.

The monument was erected from gray Vermont granite and is 30 feet high. The shaft is surmounted with the bronze figure of a Southern soldier parting from his family to go to war.

CAMPAIGN FOR $25,000 TO SAVE THE COLISEUM

A campaign will be launched next week by the Business Men's League to raise $25,000 among business men in order that the lessors of the Coliseum ground shall not foreclose on the stockholders of the Coliseum company.

A plan to save the Coliseum from extinction provides that bondholders shall waive their interest claims unless money for this purpose is earned through the operation of the building. In order to facilitate this plan, bondholders are now exchanging their first and second lien bonds for participation certificates. More than 40 per cent of the bonds have been transferred under this plan to date and it is expected that all will agree to the plan by Jan. 1.

In raising the $25,000 needed to get the company out of debt, the Executive Committee of the Business Men's League has divided the work among the 72 trade divisions of the league. The chairmen of each trade division will assemble their committees next week and proceed to raise the sum assessed against the divisions.

The Coliseum board of directors under the new plan of organization will consist of nine members, and A. C. Einstein, president of the corporation, will be chairman of the board. Richard S. Hawes is chairman of a special committee of 10 appointed by the Business Men's League Executive Committee, to reorganize the Coliseum company. The other committeemen are Richard McCulloch, Joseph R. Barroll, A. C. Brown, Hanford Crawford, A. L. Shapleigh, Moses Shoenberg, Clarence H. Howard, Philip B. Fouke and Charles A. Stix.

EVERY PASSENGER OF LUSITANIA HAS TO PROVE IDENTITY

Precautions Against Bombs Delay Departure — 9000 Sacks of Christmas Mail Aboard.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Precautions against bombs, so rigid as to be almost without precedent in this port, were exercised today by Cunard line officials on the sailing of the steamer Lusitania for Liverpool. She carried 1190 passengers. All of them who were unknown personally to the officials were stopped before boarding the vessel and made to prove their identity. The ship's departure was thus delayed an hour.

Among the passengers was Howard McClenahan, dean of Princeton University, who was commissioned by the university to investigate the condition of Belgian refugees with a view to determining the advisability of sending some of them to this country. Dean McClenahan was the bearer of a letter from President Hibben of Princeton to the German Governor-General of Belgium, requesting German aid in his investigation.

The city's newest municipal institution—the soup kitchen—was opened yesterday afternoon in the old Four Courts Building. Noodle soup was the predominating feature. There were 200 gallons of it, one-fifth of a gallon for each of the 1000 men who were served.

Mayor Kiel asked to be excused from tasting the first bowl from the kettle. He said he had another engagement. He sent Thomas H. Rogers, chairman of the Board of Efficiency, in his place. Rogers said the soup was good.

Robert E. Lee, secretary of the St. Louis Soup Kitchen Association, financing the charity, explained to the invited guests that the soup kitchen would not bring an undesirable element to St. Louis. He said other cities had established soup kitchens and that it could hardly be expected a man would travel the distance between another city and St. Louis just to get St. Louis soup.

Mrs. Albert von Hoffmann of 1754 Simpson place and Mrs. E. C. Krug of 2317 Eads avenue distributed tickets to the line of waiting men who congregated in front of the building long before the time set for the meal. They also sampled the soup and congratulated John Murphy of 221 Elm street, the chef. Murphy is a regular cook by occupation. He has been cooking in railroad camps.

The American Bakery Co. has volunteered to furnish the bread that is to go with the soup. Harry G. Dodd, merchandise broker, will purchase the groceries; Henry Bentzen, produce merchant, will buy the "soup bunches," and Louis Schaeffer, the butcher, will select the meats.

As each man entered and received his ticket he went to a window in one corner of the room, where he received a bowl of soup and "stepmother" slice of bread. He then took his place at one of the tables, and, when he finished eating, took his bowl, knife, fork and spoon to another corner of the room and deposited it with an attendant before leaving.

Soup will be served each day between 4 and 7 p. m. These hours were selected because the city later on will provide breakfast coffee for all municipal lodgers at 6 a. m. The color line is not drawn at the soup kitchen.

EXHIBIT OF WESTERN ARTISTS TO OPEN TODAY

The nineteenth annual exhibition of the Society of Western Artists, which opens today at the City Art Museum, is composed of 121 works, chiefly oil paintings, with some etchings and a few water colors, representing in all 77 artists.

Some of the pictures which catch the eye are "Positano," by Gustav von Schlegell; "North Fork," by Frank Reaugh; "The Landing, Ile Aux Moines," by Herman H. Wessel; "Late Afternoon in November," by T. C. Steele; "Girl and Umbrella," by Otto Stark; "The Outgoing Fleet," by F. de Forest Schook; "Birches," by Zulma Steele; "The Blue Girl" and "The Red Dress," by Carl Gustav Waldeck; "A Valley Farm," by Dawson Watson; "A Spring Song," by Clifton A. Wheeler; "Barren Acres," by Edmund H. Wuerpel; "Quiet Corner in the Village," by William F. Matthews; "Winter," by Dorothy Morlan; "Youth" and "In the Barn," by Walter Marshall Clute; "A Japanese Holiday," by Charles Franklin Galt, and "Portrait of Capt. John Witt," by Mary Chilton Gray.

The pictures of Waldeck, Von Schlegell, Pauline Palmer, Grover and Wessel are all joint winners of the Chicago Fine Arts prize of $500, the jury having been too puzzled to decide between them. Wuerpel, Galt, Matthews, Waldeck, Berninghaus, Von Schlegell, Watson, Miss Finkelnburg, Miss Celia Steuver, Kissack and Berdanier are the St. Louis artists represented.

A Coroner's jury decided yesterday that the death of Henry Marx, 64 years old, of 5133 Washington boulevard, who was struck Nov. 14 by an automobile driven by Mrs. Edward D. Rae of 6186 Kingsbury avenue, was accidental. Pneumonia developed in Marx's left lung, following the injury to his left side by the automobile, and Dr. Gustav Lippmann testified that the pneumonia caused death.

Mrs. Rae testified she was driving not more than 12 miles an hour on Delmar boulevard, near Academy, when Marx "fairly jumped" from the curb, apparently running to catch an approaching street car, and was struck before she could turn the car into the curb, as she tried to do.

J. L. Grether and L. J. Kurtzeborn, passengers on the street car, estimated the speed of Mrs. Rae's car at 15 to 18 miles an hour. Kurtzeborn did not see the accident, but said that when he saw the Rae machine at Clarendon avenue, a block west, Mrs. Rae had her head slightly turned, talking to her mother, Mrs. G. A. Steinwender, who sat beside her.

A controversy arose between Deputy Coroner Furlong and H. H. Rindskopf, an undertaker, about the embalming of Marx's body, which, Furlong said, had made an autopsy impossible. Rindskopf said he embalmed the body because Dr. Lippmann told him a burial certificate would be issued. Later the physician changed his mind and notified the Coroner of the death.

APPLICANTS TO SUCCEED LATE JUSTICE NUMEROUS

Lawyers and Laymen Seek Office Made Vacant by Death of Louis Spies.

Many lawyers and laymen have filed applications to be appointed Justice of the Peace to succeed Louis Spies, who died a week ago. The district where the vacancy exists embraces all of Carondelet and part of the Eleventh, Twelfth and Thirteenth Wards. The salary of a Justice is $2500 a year, but in this district it is said the legal fees, in excess of the salary, make the office worth about $3500 a year.

Spies was re-elected in November for another term of four years, but the appointment to the vacancy, which will be made by the 12 Circuit Judges, the Probate Judge and the two Judges of the Court of Criminal Correction, will be good only until the next general election, two years hence.

Among the applicants are Edward Hunt, Austin Biggs, George W. Wellmann, Anthony F. Ittner, George Eigel, Aliver de Werthern, Robert C. Wohland, Frank J. Wiget, John A. Hyde, Oscar Nohl, Louis Balbach, George E. Mix, T. F. W. Zimmermann, Robert Walker, Joseph Reilly, Theodore C. Eggers, Charles S. Luce, Chauncey Krueger, Dr. Charles A. W. Spies, a son of the late Justice; Richard M. Johnson and L. M. Conkling.

The Judges will meet Monday afternoon to consider the applications. Austin Biggs, who is not a lawyer, is said to have the indorsement of the Republican ward organizations of the district. The law does not require that a Justice of the Peace be a lawyer, but some of the Judges are opposed to considering anyone outside the legal profession for the place. Some of the applicants do not live in the district.

ATTACHMENT FOR WOMAN IN BUTLER SHOOTING CASE

Mrs. Annie Crane Able to Appear at Trial of Delegate, Doctor Says.

An attachment was issued in Judge Clark's division of the Criminal Correction Court Friday to force the appearance on Dec. 22 of Mrs. Annie Crane, 2945 Gamble street, chief witness for the State against Thomas J. Butler, a Democratic member of the House of Delegates, who is charged with having shot her Aug. 26 on Franklin avenue near his saloon.

Assistant Circuit Attorney William Fitzgerald asked for the attachment after summoning to court Dr. John C. Bran, whose certificates to the effect that Mrs. Crane was too ill to appear in court were presented three times when the case was set for trial in the past. Dr. Bran testified yesterday that Mrs. Crane had been in a highly nervous condition, but was now able to appear in court.

TAKE it from me, Dick. You can make Christmas presents worth while (a diamond, watch or jewelry) by opening a charge account at Loftis Bros. & Co., 2d fl., 308 N. 6th.

MAYOR'S BODYGUARD CATCHES 3 "BURGLARS"

Alarm Tells of "Thieves" in Treasury Vault—They Prove to Be Men Fixing Apparatus.

A commotion was caused in Mayor Kiel's office at 9:15 yesterday morning when the burglar alarm attached to the safe in the office of City Treasurer Menne sounded.

Sergt. Charles Loepker, bodyguard for Mayor Kiel, heard the alarm. He grabbed his revolver from a desk drawer and ran down the corridor to Treasurer Menne's office, second floor rear. He was just in time to see the three "burglars" leaving the office. He made a daring single-handed arrest of the three, and would have been in line for a bravery medal this year, but for the fact that the men he captured were harmless electrical workers and not daylight safe robbers. They quickly explained that the alarm was sounded accidentally while they were repairing the system.

CUPPLES CHURCH, HALTED BY SUIT, NOW TO BE BUILT

Proposed University City Edifice, Enjoined Since Spring, to Conform to Restrictions.

Litigation seeking to prevent the Cupples Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church from building an edifice at Washington and Trinity avenues, University City, ended yesterday when property owners in that section signed an agreement with the church authorities, by which they drop their suit, and the latter agree to construct the church not nearer to the northern line of Washington avenue than 17½ feet.

Suit was brought in Judge McElhinney's court, Clayton, in the spring, seeking to enjoin the church authorities from building there. The plaintiffs contended that the construction of such would be a violation of the building restrictions, and likewise alleged that the church was to be built onto the street, which would damage their property materially.

Judge McElhinney decided in favor of the church, and the plaintiffs took an appeal to the St. Louis Court of Appeals. This appeal was pending when the agreement was reached between former Judge Henry S. Caulfield and attorney George F. Haid, representing the church authorities, and S. T. G. Smith, representing the property owners who brought the suit. Work on the church will start about Jan. 1. The building will cost approximately $150,000.

OLD age can be made the period of greatest happiness, but complete good health is necessary. As age advances the stomach and bowel muscles lose their elasticity and no longer respond readily. The result is constipation, or dyspepsia, biliousness, sour stomach, bloating, drowsiness after eating, belching, headache, etc.

The foregoing was about the condition that Mr. Wm. A. Roeker, 64 Vienna St., Rochester, N. Y., found himself in some time ago. A good friend persuaded him to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a widely known laxative-tonic that has been on the market for two generations. After a brief use of it he writes that if he had the last bottle obtainable he would not part with it for a hundred dollars—and Mr. Roeker is not an especially rich man either—for he considers himself entirely well. Another noteworthy case is that of Mrs. Margaret Barringer of Newark, Ohio, who is 82.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is without doubt America's greatest household remedy. Its mild action recommends it especially for babies, women and old folks, for these should not take drastic cathartics and purgatives such as pills, powders, salt waters, etc. Your druggist sells Syrup Pepsin at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, and you should always have a bottle in the house. Thousands of old users always have the dollar size, as it is more economical. Results are guaranteed or money will be refunded.

Coupon for FREE SAMPLE

Dr. Caldwell is glad to send anyone who has never tried his remedy a free sample bottle for personal investigation. Simply clip this coupon and inclose in an envelope with your name and address, or write your name and address plainly on a postcard and mail it to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 67 Washington st., Monticello, Ill.

WOMAN PAYS BILL FOR MUSIC BOX TO RETAIN HER GOWNS

Mrs. S. A. Thompson Entertaining at Planters When Deputy Arrives to Seize Apparel.

While Mrs. Samuel A. Thompson was entertaining a man and a woman guest in her suite at the Planters Hotel, Friday afternoon, an unbidden caller dropped in for a visit.

Deputy Sheriff Martin Meyer went there to seize Mrs. Thompson's gowns for debt. When he told her the purpose of his visit she laughingly said: "It can't be done. However, I'll let you talk to my husband about it."

Mrs. Thompson led Meyer through the room where she was entertaining her guests at dinner and into another room where her husband was in bed.

Thompson told Meyer the replevin suit was filed by a New York firm from which his wife had bought a music box while they were living at the Ritz-Carleton Hotel in New York. The music box bothered him, he said, and he instructed his wife to return it. The firm refused to take it back and it was left at the Ritz-Carleton when the Thompsons returned to St. Louis. Its price was $230 and the New York firm obtained a judgment for that amount and costs against Mrs. Thompson.

Meyer remained in the Thompson suite an hour and a half. Then Walter Neun, Mrs. Thompson's attorney, arrived and advised that she pay the judgment.

When Meyer left the hotel he had a check for $259.39 and Mrs. Thompson retained her gowns.

$10,000 VERDICT IN CASE IN COURT FOR 10 YEARS

A judgment directing the Wagner Electric Manufacturing Co. of St. Louis to pay $10,000 to the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co. of Schenectady, N. Y., for alleged infringement of a patent transformer was handed down by United States District Judge Dyer yesterday. This case has been in litigation for 10 years, having gone on appeal to both the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States.

H. H. Denison, master in chancery, recommended a judgment in favor of the Westinghouse company for $132,433.35, but Judge Dyer reduced the amount to $10,000. The case was first tried before Judge Adams, who found that the patent had been infringed. He held that the Westinghouse company was entitled to a judgment equivalent to the profits made on the sale of the transformer. The Wagner company had sold $308,128.77 worth of these transformers. Dennison first fixed the damages at $132,000, but this was reduced by Judge Adams to $1. Judge Adams' decision was sustained by the Court of Appeals, but the Supreme Court held that the Wagner company and not the Westinghouse, would have to show what the profits were. Dennison was appointed master a second time, and his second report was the same as the first.

May Help if You Have Tuberculosis

Proper diet, fresh air and temperate habits aid persons suffering from Tuberculosis. Often more is needed. Reports show that Eckman's Alterative has brought about many recoveries. Read what it did in this case:

Madison Lake, Minn.

"Gentlemen—In December, 1908, I was taken with hemorrhages of the lungs, which confined me several weeks, each time to my bed. My doctor advised me to go West. In November I started for Denver, Colo.: After my arrival I met Michael Brody, who, upon learning of my condition, urged me to take Eckman's Alterative. I kept on taking the medicine and improved fast. In March, 1910, I returned home. I am entirely well, have a good appetite and sleep well. When I left Denver my weight was 130 pounds. I now weigh 165, my normal weight. I thank God and your Alterative for my health." (Abbreviated.)

(Affidavit) PAUL L. FASNACHT.

Eckman's Alterative is most efficacious in bronchial catarrh and severe throat and lung affections and upbuilding the system. Contains no harmful or habit-forming drugs. Accept no substitutes. Small size, $1: regular size, $2. Sold by leading druggists. Write for booklet of recoveries.

WASHINGTON U.'S DISPENSARY OPEN TO PUBLIC, DEC. 14

Clinic, Free to Sick Poor of City, Has Facilities to Treat 150,000 Annually.

One of the dreams of the founders of the new medical school of Washington University, at Euclid avenue and Wabash tracks, will be realized Dec. 14, when the splendidly equipped dispensary with facilities for the treatment of 150,000 patients a year will be opened to the public. Through this dispensary skilled and efficient medical treatment will be afforded practically free to the sick poor of St. Louis and vicinity.

The clinics of the Washington University Hospital, on Jefferson avenue, the O'Fallon dispensary, at 1806 Locust street, and the St. Louis Children's Hospital, on Jefferson avenue, will be closed Dec. 12, and the patients formerly treated at these clinics will be sent to the new dispensary, which occupies the two first floors of one of the university's group of buildings, on Euclid avenue.

During the past year there were treated at the three clinics which are to be closed 20,010 new cases and 84,009 old cases. The crowded conditions which hampered the work of the physicians and exposed patients to unnecessary annoyances will not exist in the new dispensary, which has been arranged to furnish every facility for the comfort of the patient and for the most careful examination and treatment.

A Social-Service Department.

One of the most important features of the new dispensary will be the social-service department, whose functions will be to investigate the home conditions which produce disease, and to devise plans for correcting them. Physicians have found that without proper home conditions it has been almost impossible to get proper results from medical treatment. The skill of the physician was lost under conditions which made the recovery of the patient almost an impossibility.

The activities of the social-service department will be expanded, and the medical institution will thus be brought into the closest possible contact with the people. The physicians who have had charge of the clinical work of the university have found that in many instances pure milk, fresh air and rest were absolutely necessary in the treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis, and that where these could not be provided the skill of the physician was of no value.

The function of the social-service department will be to see that all patients have the very best home conditions possible. In recent years there has been a rapid development of the special-service idea, physicians having learned that the social worker performs a task necessarily essential for obtaining the best results from medical treatment.

Five social workers will be employed at full time at the dispensary, and many volunteers will be continuously occupied. The dispensary has been equipped with a laboratory from which pure milk will be distributed at cost to the children of the pediatric clinic. Mothers will also be instructed in the best methods of preparing the milk for feeding their children, and for preserving its purity.

In the Midst of Hospital District.

A staff of skilled physicians will be appointed by Washington University to conduct the dispensary. Some of these physicians will devote their full time to the work of the university, and physicians from the city will devote a part of their time to school and institutional work.

The dispensary is situated in the midst of the new hospital district of St. Louis. The Barnes and Children's Hospitals are in the same group with the university buildings, and St. John's Hospital is on a block of ground immediately north.

The dispensary is connected by underground tunnels with the Barnes Hospital, the St. Louis Children's Hospital and the Washington University Medical School. There is also a corridor connecting the dispensary with the Barnes Hospital. The building is 74 feet wide and 227 feet long, and the main halls 14½ feet wide, running the entire length of the building, will be used for waiting rooms. The general arrangement of each clinical unit permits the patient to enter by one door and leave at another.

The departments of medicine, surgery, orthopedic surgery, genito-urinary surgery, pediatrics, neurology and dermatology will hold their clinics from 10 to 12 each day, and the departments of diseases of women, eye, ear, nose and throat, from 2 to 4 p. m. It is probable that clinics will be arranged for men so that they may receive treatment before or after working hours.

The dispensary will also make expert examinations of patients for the physicians of St. Louis. One of the most difficult phases of medical practice is finding out just what is the matter with the sick. The patients who are sent by physicians to the dipensary will be thoroughly examined by the staff of experts, and a correct diagnosis will be made.

To Serve Entire Community.

Admission to the clinic will be supervised by an admitting officer or differentiator who will refer the cases suitable for acceptance to the special departments, or advise them, if they are able to pay a private physician, to return to their own physician. In case they have no family physician, and are able to pay a doctor, they will be referred to the physicians or surgeons of the staff. It is the purpose of the dispensary to serve the community, and it is proposed at a nominal charge for registration to treat all whod are unable to provide for satisfactory professional services from a private physician. Where the patient is able to pay, a nominal charge will be made for special examinations, such as that with the X-ray, or for special treatments such as in the hydrotherapeutic or mechanotherapeutic departments. On the other hand, if the patient is found by the investigator of the Social-Service Department to be unable to pay, and is in need of such treatment, they will receive free treatment and the charge for registration will be waived.

In the X-ray department the work will not be confined to the study of fractures and diseases of the bones. Many conditions are treated more successfully by the use of massive doses of the ray than by any other means. In the study of the diseases of the stomach, intestines, heart and lungs, the X-ray may afford information which is possible by no other means of examination. All these facilities are made available for the patients of the Washington University Dispensary.

Finest Apparatus on Hand.

In the department of mechano-therapy is the most approved apparatus for the mechanical manipulation of the joints and correction of medical and surgical conditions which may be treated to better advantage by this mechanical means than by massage. Patients in need of treatment by baths of any type, or by the application of heat such as electric or hot water cabinets will find every facility in the department of hydrotherapy.

These three departments of X-ray, mechano-therapy and hypdrotherapy, are located in the Barnes Hospital, but will be administered by Washington University.

The desks of the admitting officers are near the entrance, and near to these are the two rooms for isolation of suspected cases of contagion. To the east of the main entrance corridor, which will afford ample waiting space for the patients on this floor, is the record room, the room for dispensing prescriptions, and the Social Service room. The record room provides for a history system quite as complete in its cross reference files as is to be found in the most exacting hospital. Records will be taken from this room to the different departments by messenger, and not handled by the patients, thus preventing loss or destruction of the record, as well as a too intense interest in the history and findings of the case.

Private Examination Rooms.

On the southern side of the building are located the rooms for the departments of pediatrics and medicine. On the northern, the rooms for the male and female surgery. Each department has separate waiting rooms for men and women. Individual examining rooms or booths are provided, so that there will be no embarrassing exposure of the patient. Each department is provided with a fully equipped clinical laboratory so located that it is equally available for all classes of patients.

On the lower floor, on the south side of the corridor are the rooms for the clinics in the diseases of skin, eye, ear, nose and throat. On the north, those for the departments of genito-urinary surgery and for orthopedic surgery.

The department of obstetrics and gynecology will, in the afternoon, occupy the space on the first floor which is occupied in the morning by surgery.

Stops Tobacco Habit in One Day

Sanitarium Publishes Free Book Showing How Tobacco Habit Can Be Banished in From One to Five Days at Home.

The Elders Sanitarium, located at 997 Main St., St. Joseph, Mo., has published a free book showing the deadly effect of the tobacco habit, and how it can be banished in from one to five days at home.

Men who have used tobacco for more than fifty years have tried this method and say it is entirely successful, and in addition to banishing the desire for tobacco has improved their health wonderfully. This method banishes the desire for tobacco, no matter whether it is smoking, chewing, cigarettes or snuff dipping.

As this book is being distributed free, anyone wanting a copy should send their name and address at once.—ADVERTISEMENT.

Soldan Girl Graduates to Wear Simple "Peter Thompson" Suits

No Fuss, Feathers nor Flowers

By Marguerite Martyn.

HOT on the train of Superintendent Blewett's embracing criticism of dress among "girls of high school age," comes news of a dress reform wave at Soldan High School. The girls of the senior class to be graduated next month have decided to appear in simple "Peter Thompson" suits upon that most momentous occasion of school life.

The reform, be it said, has struck the time and place where it was most needed. Soldan High, situated as it is in one of our most aspiring neighborhoods and attended by girls who in many cases are financially able to choose between Soldan and an expensive private school, more than lives up to its reputation at times as the fashionable high school.

Extravagance, a matter Principal Powell has continually striven to militate against, reaches its limit usually in the costumes of the girl graduates.

Simple Suits Will Be a Starting Change

FROM the profusion of laces, flowers, silks, chiffons and fine fabrics which made the stage on Commencement day look like a fashion exhibition or a professional beauty shop, to the simple and severely tailored sailor blouse costume will be a change abrupt and startling.

Nor was such a transposition brought about without a struggle at Soldan, you may be sure.

Miss June Clark is given entire credit for the leadership of the movement. Miss Clark is vice-president of the class, the highest honor to which a girl member is eligible, and outside her official capacity, based upon scholarship, is a sweet and unassuming girl. She is said to exert a strong and wholesome influence. In this instance she has proved a valued mediator between faculty and student body, although the initiation was entirely her own.

Older Sister's Graduation Object Lesson to Her

"YOU see, I have an older sister who was graduated. The unnecessary fuss about trouble and waste on that occasion was an object lesson to me."

Encouragement by the faculty, prevailing sentiment toward economy, the "near-cotton" crusade and genuine arousing of over half a world in arms, contributed convincing arguments which brought about the final agreement in favor of simplicity this year. The agreement is not entirely unanimous yet. There are 66 girls in the class of 107. The first vote taken was to abide by the decision of the majority. The next vote revealed a majority of 46. Three members never have capitulated, but they must either be overruled or have the courage of their conspicuousness on Commencement day.

The costume design decided upon is blouse with sailor collar and skirt of plain or pleated, of cotton material.

Costumes Are Admissable of Variations in Style

IT has been pointed out that such a costume is admissable of many variations both in expense and that subtle something called style. Uniformity in design, in material, in color scheme, which is to be white with black stockings and pumps and old gold silk tie, are the only points which can be insisted upon.

Already some of the girls are busy seeing how they can make their costumes superior. Some will indulge in genuine tailor mades, which may cost $25 or more. But the point is—the regulation costume may cost as little as six dollars.

Made by her own hands of six yards of material, plus the silk pump tie (which is old gold of course because it is the school color)—that is the amount Miss Clark is allowing for her own costume.

Whether expensive or inexpensive, it is distinctly impressed that no flowers, no frills, no exaggeration of V-neck or short sleeve is in harmony with the approved "Peter Thompson." Thus it is the ends of good taste and simplicity are to be achieved—this is the first time such a demonstration has been attempted in St. Louis public schools, which makes the idea worthy of note, if not emulation.

POLICEMAN PRAISED FOR TRAILING ASH SPILLER

Policeman James O'Gorman of the Tenth District received the "well done" of the Police Journal, issued yesterday, in recognition of the Sherlock Holmes attributes exercised by him in trailing an ash-spiller to his lair.

When Policeman O'Gorman discovered that ashes had been spilled in alleys near Walton and Bayard avenues, he looked for a clew, and found one in the shape of a fragment of envelope bearing a Cabanne avenue address. Following this clew he went to the address and learned that a negro living around Taylor avenue and Delmar boulevard had been hired to haul the ashes away and paid for doing so. The offender was located, haled into the Dayton street court and fined $10.

All of which leads the Police Journal to remark that although Policeman O'Gorman was only trailing an ash-spiller, his detective work was of the quality which would unravel a safe robbery or a black-hand murder mystery, and it is suggested that he may some day be given an opportunity to work on mysteries worthy of his metal.

Recognizing the Great Rug Department of Nugents as the greatest distributing center in St. Louis, and desiring to reach all the people of this section as quickly as possible and as fully as possible, The Advance Mfg. Co. decided to abandon the old, slow methods of canvassing and house-to-house solicitation, and to give the purchasers of the "Barnes Electric Suction Cleaners" all the benefit of the cost of canvassers in a reduced introductory price.

A Word About the "Barnes"

The "Barnes Electric Suction Cleaner" is the most modern machine for dustlessly cleaning carpets, rugs, furniture, curtains, draperies, bedding and for all other household cleaning. It is the most effiicient, most practical and most durable suction cleaner on the market today. It will do all the work that any suction or vacuum cleaner will do, and do it better than it can be done in any other way.

The cost of operating the Barnes Electric Suction Cleaner is one-half cent per hour. In fact, the cost is so small, the current used is so little, that you will never know, by your electric light bills, that you had used any extra current.

The "Barnes Electric Suction Cleaner" can be used in any home where there is electricity. Attaches to any electric light socket. Works smoothly, noiselessly, lightly, easily and effectively. It positively gathers up all dirt, lint and small objects—it keeps your home so clean you'll be able to avoid the usual spring and fall housecleaning.

The "Barnes Electric Suction Cleaner" is worth the $25.00 at which it has heretofore been sold. Every machine is fully guaranteed for one year by the manufacturers and by Nugents.

One thousand of these machines will be offered for sale exclusively at Nugents, for one week, beginning tomorrow, Monday, December 7, in St. Louis' greatest Rug Dept., 3rd floor, also Drapery Section, 2nd floor and Basement, for $12.48 each, with a full year's guarantee with each and every "Barnes Electric Suction Cleaner" sold.

COMES BACK AFTER 10 YEARS TO PLAY AT THE SYMPHONY

Theodore Spiering, Former St. Louis Violinist, to Appear at This Week's Concerts.

The Symphony Orchestra has engaged a former St. Louisan, Theodore Spiering, as the solo artist of its programmes next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, in place of the noted German violinist, Willy Burmester, who, a fortnight ago, canceled his entire American tour.

Burmester is a German subject and a resident of Berlin. His reasons for canceling his tour were the fear of mines in the North Sea over which any ship in which he could sail for America would have to pass, and the additional fear of arrest as a subject of the Kaiser if he should encounter any British military or naval authorities during the trip across the ocean.

Although Spiering enjoys a wide acquaintance as soloist, teacher and conductor abroad and in the East, he has seldom been heard in St. Louis, and the forthcoming visit will be his first in more than 10 years, as well as his first appearance as solo violinist in nearly 15 years.

Has Resided in Berlin.

For the last seven years he has resided in Berlin, where he conducted a class in violin and held the position of concertmeister of the Bleutner Orchestra, and whence he made numerous concert tours on the Continent and in England each year. In 1909 he was specially engaged as concertmeister of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, when Gustav Mahler conducted that orchestra, and after Mahler's death toward the end of the season Spiering conducted the remaining concerts.

Spiering will play in St. Louis a composition made memorable to all Symphony attendants as the farewell of the greatest of all violinists, Eugene Ysaye, last season. Everyone who braved the worst blizzard of last winter to hear Ysaye always will remember the Bruch Concerto No. 1, which he played then.

The Symphony of the same two programs will be the second of Schumann. The program in full follows:

Overture—Melpomene	Chadwick
Symphony No. 2, C major, Op. 61	Schumann
Concerto No. 1 in G minor for violin and orchestra	Bruch
Caprice Espagnole, Op. 34	Rimsky-Korsakow

This afternoon Conductor Zach will present his new first 'cellist, Ludwig Pleier, as soloist at the "Pop" concert. Pleier will play Popper's "Hungarian Fantasy" with orchestral accompaniment, the same composition which won him such great applause in the concert given Nov. 24 in Hannibal, Mo., by the orchestra. The program follows:

Polonaise in A	Chopin
Overture to Merry Wives of Windsor	Nicolai
Violoncello Solo, Hungarian Fantasy	Popper
Selections from Madam Butterfly	Puccini
La Lisonjera (The Flatterer) (First time.)	Chaminade
Prelude to Act 5, King Manfred (First time.)	Reinecke
Waltz—Blue Danube	Strauss

Great interest is being shown in the "request" concert of Sunday afternoon, Dec. 27. Already a large number of requests have been received.

Any person attending any of the concerts given by the orchestra is entitled to ask for a favorite composition, and may request anything in the orchestra's repertoire. Those compositions receiving the largest number of votes in the final count will be the ones selected for the program.

CIVIC COUNCIL TO URGE THAT CITY COLLECT ASHES

It Is Believed Plan Will Result in Saving to All Taxpayers.

The Central Civic Council, at its December meeting last week, resolved to push the movement for the municipal collection of rubbish and ashes. The 16 improvement associations which constitute the council say the city should undertake the work as a matter of economy to householders. The present estimated cost to householders in St. Louis for the removal of rubbish and ashes is $500,000 a year. If the city did the work the cost, it is estimated, would be about $150,000.

It is understood that Director of Streets and Sewers Talbert is working out a plan for the city's undertaking this service in the future, but he opposes taking it up next year. The city revenues are in such shape that it would be difficult to get the appropriation. The Central Civic Council, however, will point out that even if this work necessitates a slight increase in the tax rate, it would save money to every taxpayer.

A committee composed of Vincent M -Shane of the Civic League, C. C. Crone of the North St. Louis Citizens' Association and E. H. Schwartz of the South Forest Park Residents Association were appointed to see Comptroller Player and Director Talbert.

The Council at its meeting highly commended Director Talbert for his proposed plan for abolishing street sprinkling by water in St. Louis and substituting for it a flushing system for hard pavemets adn oiling for soft-paved streets. Two automobile oilers, which it is proposed to purchase for the coming season, will care for 80 miles of streets the first year. Director Talbert hopes to have street sprinkling by water entirely abolished within three years.

Tom P. Barnett addressed the delegates on the central traffic parkway plan. The Central Council has indorsed the project.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR UNIQUE OZARK SCHOOL

Holiday Goodies for Students at Institution Where All Do Real Work.

Christmas boxes, containing clothing, holiday delicacies like jellies and canned fruits, and other useful and attractive articles, are being prepared by the St. Louis Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the students of the School of the Ozarks, at Forsyth, Taney County, Missouri. This is a manual training school conducted by the Southern Presbyterian Church, with the Rev. John Crockett at president. The boxes are to be arranged under the supervision of Mrs. John Booth, 4412 Delmar boulevard.

The school was opened in 1906 with 75 pupils. The Missouri Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution have given three and a half scholarships to the school, by aid of which five students are pursuing their education.

Girl students do the cooking, serve at the tables, wash dishes, sweep and dust, and do practically all of the housework. The boy students cut about 200 cords of firewood for winter use, do the field work, help with the carpentering and work in the print shop.

POLICE GET HINT TO LOOK WELL IN COURT

Policemen who go to court as witnesses in plain clothes and chew tobacco or gum on the witness stand would better watch out or the Chief will send them before the board. As much was intimated in yesterday's issue of the Police Journal.

Information has reached Chief Young that many policemen are getting into the habit of going to court in plain clothes, whereas Section 85 of the Manual requires that a policeman shall unless excused by a commanding officer, wear his uniform, a white standing collar, a black necktie, white cuffs and black shoes and shall at all times keep his coat buttoned.

SCHOOL PATRONS' SMOKER

The Charless School Patrons' Association held its first smoker and get-together meeting at Fraternal Union Hall last week. George C. Luft, vice-president, introduced William Zachritz, president of the St. Louis Patrons' Alliance, who explained how the organization of patrons' associations can do much toward helping educate the child.

There were instrumental and vocal selections by William H. Fellhauer and Paul Thomas, after which Prof. Helstand entertained by his legerdemain. The latter part of the program consisted of vocal selections by G. D. Hollerman.

Shirt Sale Extraordinary

3 Regular $1 Shirts for $1.75

The Well-Known Strand Brand

This is unquestionably the most remarkable shirt selling event we have held in a long time. A tremendous purchase of 12,000 Shirts occasions such noteworthy an event. The special price concession was made us by the manufacturer who figured that a distribution of 12,000 "Strand" Shirts in St. Louis would convert many new wearers to the "Strand" standard in the future.

The Shirts are all fresh & new, made up to our individual order from a vast yardage of "80 square count" Harmony percale cloth which we secured at a fraction of worth & which the well-known maker of Strand Shirts worked up for us in accordance with our specifications.

There's a wonderful range of attractive patterns—Shirts made up in negligee styles, with attached laundered cuffs & such as usually retail at $1 in the regular way.

We've planned a "Club Sale" for this vast purchase, & offer the entire lot in a combination group of three for $1.75. Not less than three are to be sold in a lot, but most buyers will want to take six or more, as they will make useful Christmas gifts.

BODY OF GIRL, BRUTALLY SLAIN, FOUND IN CHURCH

Child, 10, Had Been Going to Sacramento Building to Make Christmas Gifts.

POLICE HOLD JANITOR

Mother Says Boys Warned Her That He Was "Fresh" With Little Girls.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Dec. 5.—The murdered body of Margaret Millings, 10 years old, was found in the basement of a church here today by David Fountain, the janitor, who was dusting up for Sunday. The child had been attacked and strangled to death.

Fountain notified the Rev. Charles F. Oehler, pastor of the church, who in turn notified the police. The janitor was taken into custody. He told a story which found corroboration in some particulars tonight.

The Millings girl had been meeting at the church with some companions twice a week to sew on Christmas gifts. Today was not a meeting day and she is supposed to have gone to the church by mistake.

How she got in and who the murderer was remained a mystery late tonight. Fountain told the police he locked all the doors upon going to lunch and noticed upon returning that one of them was open. He said this could be corroborated by Benjamin Oehler, the pastor's son, who was fixing an automobile near the church and whose attention Fountain said he directed to the open door. Going to the basement after a duster he found the body huddled in a corner, strangled with a cord, and with the marks of a man's hand gouged into the face.

The little girl, clad in kilties, unusually happy, left her home at 12:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon for the church, where she had expected to participate in a sewing bee. Nothing unusual was thought about visiting the church for the afternoon, for she had often gone there before. She was a member of the Sunday School, also one of the choristers of the church.

"I have been told to beware of the janitor," said Mrs. Millings soon after learning of the terrible death of her daughter, whose body was at the morgue before she noticed that it was late in the afternoon and time for her to be home from the church.

"My boys told me often that the janitor was too fresh with the little girls. They did not like it and told me many times that I should be careful because he was a funny man," said the mother between sobs.

John Millings, the girl's father, left his home immediately after learning of the murder of his daughter, and could not be found. The wife was anxious for his welfare, believing that in a fit of despondency he might have done something unusual to add to the sorrow of the home.

NOVEL SUGGESTION TO IDENTIFY VOTERS

Color of Hair, Eyes and Complexion Should Be Noted on Registration Day.

Taking up the question of election frauds, the October grand jury, in its report yesterday, made the novel recommendation that something like a Bertillon system of identification for voters be adopted by law.

Judges and clerks of registration, when registering a person, should be required to note the individual features of the person, such as color of hair, eyes and complexion, the grand jury said.

To prevent the registration of "tombstone" voters it is urged that the mortuary clerk of the Board of Health make daily reports to the Election Commissioners of the deaths of male persons more than 21 years old, and that the Election Board should have power to strike such names from its lists upon becoming satisfied that registered voters and dead men of the same names are really identical.

Other recommendations were a card index of all registered voters, election judges and clerks chosen from the ward at large instead of from their own precincts; that clerks should have three days, instead of one, after registration day to canvass the registration list.

If a clergyman performs the ceremony the fee is $2, the clergyman himself paying the war tax. If a Justice of the Peace officiates, the fee is $2.10, the war tax being paid by the bridegroom.

GENUINE motion pictures of actual fighting in the war in Belgium, made under a special arrangement with the Belgian Government, will be displayed at the Garrick Theater, beginning next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 13, under the auspices of the Post-Dispatch. A substantial share of the receipts will go to the benefit of the Post-Dispatch Christmas Festival. The pictures will be shown continuously from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. The admission price will be 25 cents.

The film to be displayed, entitled "On Belgian Battlefields," is 4500 feet long and is in four reels. The chief scenes shown are the battles of Alost, Malines, Aerschot and Lierre and the fall of Antwerp. The views were made by Edwin F. Weigle, staff photographer of the Chicago Tribune, and an assistant.

Other so-called motion pictures of the war have been largely pictures of maneuvers, occurring before war was declared, or of posed scenes. These pictures are convincingly genuine in every detail. The right and the opportunity to take them were given to Weigle by a contract, signed by a representative of the Belgian Military of Antwerp, before the fall of that city, with Joseph Medill Patterson, representing the Tribune company.

Photographer on Firing Line.

The fullest privileges were accorded to Weigle and his assistant and they held passes which entitled them to go wherever they wished and to approach as near as they cared to the firing line. That they were very near the firing line many times is shown by the pictures. Weigle was repeatedly within 50 feet of the actual fighting and several times had to jump out of the way of bursting shrapnel.

The film had its first presentation Nov. 8 at the Studebaker Theater in Chicago. The theater, which holds 1800 persons, was packed to its capacity at every performance in the 16 days' run of the film.

One of the pictures which most interested the Chicago public was that showing the destruction of a house near Termonde by the explosion of a shell. This occurs just after a party of soldiers is seen beside the house, firing on German soldiers who are not seen in the pictures.

In the opening scene of the film, the beleaguered city of Antwerp is shown from the Cathedral tower, and then, in a picture made on the road near Alost, the first actual fighting is shown. An armored motor car and machine guns drawn by Belgium's famous "dogs of war" appears in this scene. A retreat of the Belgian artillery is followed by a new charge, reinforcements having been received.

Beside the actual fighting, the flight of Belgian refugees is shown. An alternating pageant of ammunition wagons, peasants' carts, baby carriages, ministering priests and nuns and trench-digging soldiers carries the spectators, in imagination, to the now devastated fields and towns whose names will be remembered as long as history remains.

BUTCHER IS SHOT TWICE BY ROBBERS; THROWS A CLEAVER

Aims Meat Chopper at Intruders After He Has Been Wounded by Bullet.

William Ebel, 54 years old, although shot in the stomach last night, defended his cash drawer so valiantly with a meat cleaver that two robbers were driven empty-handed from his butcher shop at 2257 South Jefferson avenue. He paid for his resistance, however, with a second wound in the thigh.

Ebel closed his shop at 10 o'clock and his wife and grown son, leaving him alone, went across the street to a drug store for ice cream. A quarter of an hour later there was a knocking at the door and the butcher admitted two men. One inquired the price of bacon and, being told, asked for half a pound and laid a $1 bill on the counter.

While Ebel was wrapping the package, the second man edged around the counter towards the cash drawer. As the butcher turned towards him the man produced a revolver and exclaiming "I've got you," fired a shot which struck Ebel in the abdomen.

Throws Meat Cleaver.

Ebel seized a cleaver. The robbers ran towards the door, one grabbing his $1 bill. Ebel threw the cleaver, but was in such pain from his wound that he missed his aim, the missile falling between the robbers. At the door the man with the revolved fired another shot, which hit Ebel in the right thigh. He fell to the floor and the robbers fled.

Ebel was taken to the Lutheran Hospital. His condition is said to be serious.

Robbers Hold Up Merchant; Take $600 From His Safe.

Three armed men took about $600, most of which belonged to the Laclede Gas Light Co., from a safe in the dry goods store of Walter P. Marquard at 2500 North Twenty-second street, about 10:30 o'clock last night when they gained admission, after Marquard had locked the front door for the night, on the pretext that one of them wanted to buy a shirt.

Marquard told the police he was still in the store talking to J. H. Hasske of 1947 North Ninth street, a customer, who was accompanied by his 12-year-old nephew, Ernest Mabe, when the men knocked on the door. Marquard started to wait on the man who wanted a shirt when all three drew revolvers and covered the proprietor and his customer.

They asked Marquard, who is collecting agent for the gas company, where he kept the company's receipts. One robber then went to the safe, which had not been locked, and took the money. Another robber guarded Marquard and his companions, while the third took a gold tie pin from Haaske. The robbers escaped by the back door.

Two men entered the tailor shop of Abraham Smith, 112 North Tenth street, about 8:40 o'clock last night and leveled revolvers at him. Smith called for help and reached for a weapon. One robber struck him on the head with a revolver and then both fled.

MOTORMAN BREAKS NOSE OF LAWYER IN FIGHT ON CAR

George D. Little Opened Window to Get Fresh Air and Battle Resulted.

George D. Little of 5713 Longfellow boulevard, an attorney, paid with a broken nose and numerous abrasions for his love of fresh air yesterday evening.

With a friend he boarded a westbound Eighteenth street car at Sixth and Pine streets at 5:30 o'clock and walked forward to the front vestibule. Remarking to his companion that the car was too hot, Little opened a side window in the vestibule. The motorman, William J. Davidson of 3636 Cottage avenue, commanded him to close it again.

There were two versions of the attorney's reply. His own was that he politely protested that the car was smotheringly hot. The motorman's was that Little exclaimed "I'll knock your block off."

In a moment a fight was in progress, in which each declared the other struck the first blow. Men on the car crowded towards the front for a better view, while the women screamed in fear of an accident. Although Davidson had managed to turn off the power, the car was sliding forward under its momentum.

It came to a stop at Ninth street, and a United Railways inspector and a traffic policeman sprang aboard. The policeman separated the combatants and placed them under arrest. The inspector rerouted the car so that, instead of turning south on Ninth street, it continued to Twelfth and brought up before Police headquarters.

Leaving the car and its passengers in the street, the attorney and the motorman were led before a Desk Sergeant. There they suddenly discovered they were the best of friends and shook hands with a grin, Little's being somewhat distorted by his wounds.

Each declined to place a charge against the other. Davidson returned to finish his trip and Little went to the city dispensary, where he was treated for a fracture of the nose and contusions on the jaw and under the left eye. He is 30 years old and has offices in the Commercial Building.

CONDITION IS SERIOUS

Sam Mintz, 47 years old, of 2815 Gamble street, who frequently has been prosecuted on charges of conducting a "fence" for box car and stake wagon thieves, and who was once saved from conviction by testimony of former Chief of Detectives Smith that he employed Mintz as a "stool pigeon," was mysteriously shot four times last night at the back door of his home. At the city hospital it was said that he had little chance to recover.

Says Man Demanded Money.

Mintz told the police that at 11:35 o'clock, being alone in his flat on the second floor, he heard a noise at the back door as if some one were fumbling with the lock. He tiptoed to the door and suddenly flung it open. On the threshold stood two men. The foremost, holding a revolver in his hand, demanded money, Mintz said.

He refused and grappled with the armed man. They rolled down a long flight of steps to a porch on the first floor, and as they fell the revolver was fired four times. One bullet struck Mintz in the abdomen, another in the right arm, the third in the left wrist and the last in the left thigh. His assailants then ran away.

Mintz declared he did not recognize either of them, and that he believed their purpose was burglary. The police worked on the theory that the shooting might have been the result of a feud in a gang of wagon thieves with whom they reckoned Mints to be acquainted.

Shot in House, Police Say.

That Mintz's story of the attack was incorrect in important details was concluded by Sergt. Phillips of the Dayton Street Station, who made an investigation. The shooting, Phillips said, occurred in Mintz's kitchen, where he was found lying, and where there were four bullet holes in the wall. The room was filled with powder smoke.

That robbery was not the motive, Phillips reasoned, was indicated from the fact that Mintz's trousers, which were near by and which contained $85.10, were not disturbed. Mintz had been in bed, as the rumpled blankets showed, but only 15 minutes before the attack he had gone to a grocery on the corner and bought 25 cents' worth of coffee.

Under Two Indictments.

Mintz at present is under indictment for complicity of the theft of 91 automobile tires, the case being set for Tuesday in the Criminal Court. He is also under indictment at Springfield, Ill., for an alleged robbery of a box-car in East St. Louis.

The police records show that Mintz has been arrested almost 50 times on charges of theft and of conducting a clearing house for stolen goods, and in 1904 he began serving a three-year term in the penitentiary. In 1908 he was convicted of robbing a freight car in Luxemburg and sentenced to seven years in prison. He obtained a new trial on appeal and the case was dismissed last April at Clayton because the State, after a search of three years, was unable to find the witness to whose testimony the first conviction was due.

MEMBER OF MABRAY GANG OF SWINDLERS PARDONED

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Io., Dec. 5.—John R. Dobbins, formerly a druggist of Princeton, Mo., member of the famous Mabray gang of swindlers and the one who finally "squealed" on his companions, was yesterday unconditionally pardoned out of the Iowa State Penitentiary by Gov. Clarke after serving five years.

Dobbins was the first of the gang to be arrested. He was the "come on" in the scheme by which Banker T. W. Ballew of Princeton was fleeced out of $30,00 on a fake horse race, and was arrested in New York, where he had gone to spend his share of Ballew's money. En route to New York Dobbins and his wife met a friend from Princeton, and Mrs. Dobbins told of having trimmed Ballew. The story got back to Princeton and Ballew then took action. The fake race in which Ballew lost was run in Council Bluffs.

CANAL TAKES BUSINESS

Railroads Get Only 39 Per Cent of Sea-to-Sea Traffic.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 5.—Competition between the transcontinental railroads and the steamship companies using the Panama Canal has become so keen that President William Sproule of the Southern Pacific company, in an authorized interview here today, said the commerce of the Pacific Coast was "in the throes of a transportation crisis."

The tonnage from California to the Atlantic seaboard by sea and rail combined in August, September and October of 1914 was 120,000 tons, Sproule said. Of this the railroads got 67,000 tons, or 39 per cent, and the sea carriers got 102,000, or 61 per cent."

WOMAN ACCUSER OF RICH MAN HELD ON BRIBERY CHARGE

OFFICIALS MAKE CHARGE

Chicago U. S. Attorney Says She Offered to Split if They Helped Her Get $50,000.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Miss Jessie E. Cope, accuser of Col. Charles Alexander, a Providence (R. I.) millionaire, under the Mann act, was arrested here today, charged with attempting to bribe Government officials in Chicago to aid her to blackmail Alexander out of $50,000. Alexander, 65 years old and married, was arrested at Providence yesterday.

The public had its first view of the woman when she was arraigned before United States Commissioner Mason, who held her on the bribery charge and also as a witness against Alexander. She was permitted to sign her own bond for $5000 and a hearing was set for next Saturday. She is 32 years old and a brunette, described by one of the Government agents who resisted the bribe offer as a "brilliant brunette beauty." She is of medium height and weight and as she appeared in court was handsomely gowned.

To cure his many ills
If he'd had luck enough to see
The grand old Berkshire Hills.
He saw the beauty of the place;
He cared no more to roam,
So built a cozy bungalow
And made another home.

"The fair fields lie on either hand,
The soughing pine trees sigh
And far and wide on every side
The mountains meet the sky.

"It's hard to realize it now,
But many years ago
The Indians raised merry Ned
Upon the fields below.
They drank the sand springs water,
Which cured all human ills,
And took the sand springs ginger ale
Instead of doctor's pills.

"We welcome then this stranger
Within our peaceful vale;
May all his days be happy ones
And blessings never fail.

"May all his benedictions
Since Nelson Roberts built it
We know it's waterproof.

"May life be full of sunshine,
May heaven blessings send,
On Col. Alexander,

Clyne, Michael L. Igoe, his first assistant; Hinton G. Clabaugh, head of the local division of the Department of Justice, and Lucien C. Wheeler, an agent working under Clabaugh, manifested studied reluctance when Miss Cope first brought her charges against Alexander before the District Attorney.

In the end, according to a formal statement issued by Igoe, she proposed, and formulated the proposal in a written agreement that if the Government officials would assist her in extorting $50,000 from Alexander she would give them half of it to be split among them. The other half of the sum she said she would keep and out of it she must pay her attorneys, she said, according to Igoe. Igoe said that her attorney at Los Angeles was named Terrell, and her other lawyer in Providence was named Thomley. He did not know their other names.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 5.—Col. Charles Alexander, banker and manufacturer, director of the Canadian Steel Co. and man of large means, with his family played a conspicuous part in the social life of Providence.

Col. Alexander gave bond for his appearance in Chicago the first Thursday in January.

There is no man in Providence who has a higher business standing than Col. Alexander. He is a director of the Union Trust Co. of Providence and is heavily interested financially in some of the largest manufacturing concerns in the State.

Friends Say Miss Cope Expected to Marry Alexander.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 5.—Until last August at least, Miss Jessie Cope expected to marry Col. Alexander, according to an acquaintance. Miss Cope and her mother had been here since April, but left in August after engaging rooms at the same apartment house for the first of December.

Alexander met Miss Cope here two years ago. At that time he was living in Pasadena. Last year Miss Cope told Mrs. Esther Church, another apartment house proprietor, that she intended to marry Col. Alexander, whom she described as a very wealthy man. Mrs. Cope also was said to have declared her daughter was engaged to the Rhode Island manufacturer.

Congressman Marries Izetta Jewel, Actress

BALTIMORE, Dec. 5.

CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM G. BROWN JR., of West Virginia and Miss Izetta Jewel Kenney of Babylon, N. Y., were married here today. Mrs. Brown was an actress, her stage name being Izetta Jewell.

Miss Jewel has a home at Babylon, L. I. She made her first New York appearance in 1910, with Otis Skinner, in a leading role in "Your Humble Servant." In the summer of 1911 she took an automobile trip of 1200 miles through California. She was reported to be engaged to Frank H. Hitchcock, former Postmaster-General, a year ago. In denying this report, she said:

"There is not a word of truth in the report—never was and never will be. It happens that I am devoted to a man in California."

Museum Director's Wife Reports Loss of Money and $4326 Certificate of Deposit.

Two city detectives sallied forth yesterday to solve the "Mystery of the Missing Moneybag," but succeeded instead in unraveling the "Enigma of the Vanishing Shoes." Both problems were set for them by Mrs. Elizabeth Eichler of 3518 Laclede avenue, wife of Augustus T. Eichler, manager of an anatomical museum on Broadway.

Mrs. Eichler had reported to the police that she returned Friday afternoon from Memphis, where she had been visiting a sick daughter for five weeks. In a bag of flannel inside her waist she carried more than $1000 in currency, she said, and a certificate of deposit on the Boatmen's Bank for $4326.

Finding the house cold, she changed into warmer clothes and put the moneybag, she thought she remembered, on a sideboard in the kitchen. Then an expressman arrived with her trunks and she gave him a bill to change out of a traveling fund of $50 which she had tied in a handkerchief. Next came a department store truckman to deliver a mattress, and soon afterwards a daughter and a son appeared to welcome her home and stay to dinner.

Flannel Bag Is Gone.

So busy and excited was she that it was not until 8.30 p. m., after her son and daughter had gone, that she had time to remember the $1000 in cash and a $4000 certificate of deposit. She went to the place where she thought she had left them. The flannel bag was not there. A moment later she discovered a pair of black shoes had also vanished.

She searched the house all night, without avail, and yesterday morning went to the bank to notify the cashier of the loss of the certificate. She was advised to consult the police.

When Detectives Callahan and Aylward reached her front door they saw a key sticking in the lock, and depending on it from a ring were other keys. Perhaps a clew to the method by which the burglar gained entrance? They hastened with their discovery to Mrs. Eichler, who dashed them somewhat by exclaiming that she herself had absentmindedly left the keys in the lock.

Mustering their powers of deduction, the sleuths, learning that Mrs. Eichler was chilly on her arrival, asked her if she had not perhaps lighted the stove in the kitchen? She had, and had cooked her dinner upon it. An oven might have occurred to the feminine mind as an excellent hiding place, or bank, reflected the detectives.

They went to the stove and flung open the oven door. Sure enough, an odor saluted them which might have come from overheated fabric of some sort. Inside they found the missing shoes, somewhat shriveled, but of the money bag no trace.

Woman Shoots Self at Grave.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5. — As mourners turned from the grave of Richard R. Levis, buried at Oakwoods Cemetery, one of them, Miss Maude M. Gregg, 29 years old, shot herself. She was taken to a hospital, where it was said she probably would die. Levis was killed Wednesday morning in an automobile accident.

VERA CRUZ HAS LOST ITS SILVER KEY TO THE CITY

Many Relics Also Missing Since American Evacuation, Newspaper Asserts.

VERA CRUZ, Mexico, Dec. 5.—"Our authorities are proceeding scrupulously in making investigations as to the whereabouts of many historic relics which have disappeared from the Public Library on the North American evacuation," says today's Opinion, a daily newspaper. "The spacious hall of the popular library was found in such a state of disorder that it was necessary to make new inventories of all the works, basing these on previous lists made by the Mexican authorities.

"As this work proceeds it has been noticed that many books of intrinsic value have disappeared. Also highly prized historical relics of great value have vanished. Among others, the keys to the city, made of silver and weighing 800 grams, and two flags taken from the invaders of 1847, and some paintings. Our readers already know that from the walls of the main salon of the City Council chamber were taken two etchings which represented scenes of the 1847 invasion, there being unmistakable signs that these etchings were cut from their frames, the culprits not wishing to carry off the heavy frames. Indeed, all of the 1847 documents have gone."

A report is also current that many old archives were ransacked and that some American officers who make stamp collections were seen with these old documents and stamps.

EIGHT BEARS REPLEVINED, BUT LEFT WITH OWNER

Deputy Sheriff Charles W. Dickmann suffered a case of Arctic extremities yesterday when he went to a theater at 17 South Sixth street to replevin eight polar bears, which were being exhibited there by Ernest Albers. Dickmann was armed with a claim for $100 made against Albers by Adolph Marks, a Chicago lawyer.

"Better be sure they get plenty to eat," remarked Albers after Dickmann announced he had come to take the big plantigrades away.

"What kind of food do they like?" asked the Deputy Sheriff.

"Oh, about seventy or eighty loaves of bread a day, washed down with 20 gallons of certified milk."

SMILE AND LIVE 100 YEARS

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 5.—Prof. Frederick Starr, 56 years old, of the University of Chicago, a scientist with a score of foreign decorations, declared here today he is certain he will live to be 120 years old.

Another man who feels sure of great longevity, said Prof. Starr, is Count Okuma, Premier of Japan, who is absolutely certain he will reach 125 years. Prof. Starr said the secret of a long life is always to smile, never to get angry, and to keep working all the time.

GERMANS ON NEW LINE IN POLAND; FRENCH GAIN IN ALSACE-LORRAINE

Determined to Keep Russians Out of Their Country, Kaiser's Soldiers in Eastern Theater Take Stations for an Entirely New Battle.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Although fighting has been taking place both on the eastern and western fronts, there have been no material changes in the positions of the belligerents during the last 24 hours. It would seem as though on both fronts the vast armies have been engaged largely in making preparations for new battles.

Here and there heavy cannonades or infantry attacks have occurred, all of which, however, were more in the nature of feelers to try to learn the enemy's strength than a serious design in the way of an advance.

In Poland the Germans, whose daring stroke to penetrate the Russian center apparently has ended in failure, are forming a new line extending roughly from Kutno, in the north, to Cracow in the south. The right, or southern wing of this army, which rests on Cracow, is commanded by Gen. Dankl.

New Army in Position.

He is supported on the north by the army under Gen. Hetzendorf, which is based on Czenstochowa, while the new army, which was sent from the west fills the gap between this force and Gen. Mackenzen's army, which after extricating itself from the Russian meshes, is now in a new position extending from Kutno southward. The eighth East Prussian army presumably has taken up the northern part of the line.

Thus it will be seen that an entirely new battle is about to be fought, for the Germans are determined, at all costs, to keep the Russians out of their territory. Late reports of the previous battle around Lodz described that engagement as the most sanguinary of the war.

Interest Shifts to Alsace.

On the western front interest tends to shift from Flanders to Lorraine and upper Alsace. There has been little fighting in that part of Belgium still held by the allies. The French have taken some old German trenches, which has given rise to the belief that the Germans have decided to fall back to new positions.

Operations of more serious import are taking place on the border of Alsace-Lorraine. In upper Alsace the French apparently have made considerable progress and they also are making desperate efforts to sever the communications of the German force which has been holding St. Mihiel, on the Meuse, for many weeks. Everywhere, however, siege warfare prevails and for the most part the gains made extend hardly more than a hundred yards.

In the near east similar conditions prevail and nothing has occurred which might be termed a battle.

HEAVY FIGHTING SOUTH OF LODZ

PETROGRAD, via London, Dec. 5.—The center of the field of operations in the eastern arena of the war has moved to the south of Lodz in Russian Poland. The German effort centers at Szczerczow, 20 miles west of Piotrkow, with that town the objective. Heavy fighting is reported also along a line from Glowno, 16 miles northeast of Lodz, to the Vistula River.

The strength of the German forces opposing the Russian left wing is estimated at five corps, each corps occupying a front from eight to 10 miles in extent.

There are indications that owing to the exhaustion of the troops composing the German center, most of those regiments which lost a large percentage of their fighting strength have been withdrawn or are resting on their arms, and that fresher troops are holding the line during a temporary cessation in the battle.

News dispatches from the front attribute the Russian success in crushing the German forces near Lodz chiefly to the miraculous endurance and tireless aggression of the Siberian troops.

The entire wooded region from Brzeziny to Kurpin is described in these dispatches as a German graveyard.

LONDON, Nov. 5.

THE Victoria Cross has been bestowed upon Private George Wilson, Second Battalion Highland Light Infantry, for "most conspicuous gallantry on Sept. 14, near Nerneuil, in attacking a hostile machine gun."

The official announcement describing Private Wilson's gallantry says:

"He was accompanied by only one man. When the latter was killed he went on alone and shot the officer and six men who were working the gun, which he captured."

Here an unsupported Siberian battalion is reported to have charged a battery of heavy German artillery and to have bayonetted the gunners.

The dead and wounded in this district are reported to be so thick that the Russian hospital corps, after working three days, had not cleared the field. Most of the Germans treated showed bayonet wounds.

The fire-blackened ruins of the village of Kurpin, dispatches from the front say, are packed with charred bodies of Germans who took refuge from the Siberian bayonets to fall under the fire of a Russian battery.

Dispatches from Poland say that the German disaster, attending the march to reach the main German force from an isolated center, began with a charge of the Siberians at Rzgow, a town six miles south of Lodz.

The Siberians, after a long march, entered prepared trenches and immediately asked permission to attack Rzgow, where the Germans were intrenched in a slight rise of the ground. The Siberians deployed and attacked the German position from two sides. The unexpectedness of the Russian assault surprised the Germans and the first trenches were quickly taken, though the Germans soon recaptured them. In the next few hours these trenches were taken and retaken three times.

On being dislodged finally at Rzgow the Germans retreated northward, pounded by the Russians until the main body of Germans was reached.

"Desperate engagements in front of Lowics and particularly in the region of Lodz and along the roads from the west toward Piotrkow continue.

"On Dec. 4, on the roadway between Pobianic and Lask, our armored automobiles, by favor of the darkness, fell upon a large column of the enemy, dispersing it with machine gun fire and artillery, causing serious losses.

PETROGRAD, via London, Dec. 5.—Lodz was subjected yesterday to a vicious attack and bombardment. The heaviest fighting was for the possession of a Jewish cemetery on the outskirts of the city.

This position changed hands twice. As the result of many attacks and counter attacks the German and Russian troops exhausted their ammunition but continued fighting with bayonets and rifle butts.

The gas house in Lodz was damaged. The suburb of Baluti was burned and three other outlying villages were partly destroyed by fire caused by exploding shells. Thirty citizens were killed and 200 wounded. In Lodz 50 houses and a Catholic church were demolished.

The Bourse Gazette says the Roman Curia has requested the Austrian Government, through the Papal Nuncio at Vienna, to remove from the Cathderal at Cracow the wireless apparatus erected there and guns placed on the building.

French Consolidate Lines Between Dixmude and Ypres.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—The following official communication was issued by the French War Office tonight:

"The same activity prevailed today as the day before. We have consolidated our position to the north of the House of the Ferryman (on the canal between Dixmude and Ypres) which was captured Dec. 4.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing of importance to communicate."

Members of French Cabinet Returning to Paris.

BORDEAUX, via Paris, Dec. 5.—The members of the French Cabinet are returning to Paris, where it is expected the Government will be reestablished at an early date. No date has yet been announced for the return of President Poincare, but it is understood he will leave Bordeaux early next week.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—King George has returned from France, where he visited the British forces at the front. The King arrived at Buckingham Palace this evening.

Australian Battle Cruiser Is Reported Missing.

BERLIN, via wireless to Sayville, L. I., Dec. 5.—Information given out today to the press by the German official press bureau says that, according to a report received by an Italian newspaper, Corriere Della Sera, the Australian battle cruiser Australia (19,000 tons), last reported in Hawaiian waters, apparently is missing.

Servian Cabinet Resigns, Premier Picks New Ministry.

ROME, via London, Dec. 5.—A telegram from Nish, Servia, to the Stefani News Agency, announces that the Servian Cabinet, headed by Nikola Pachitch, resigned today, and that Premier Pachitch is forming a new ministry.

Italian Chamber Votes Confidence in Government.

ROME, Dec. 5.—The Italian Chamber today passed a vote of confidence in the Government, 413 to 49.

Admiral Betollo, ex-Minister of Marine, presented the resolution calling for a vote of confidence in the Cabinet. The Admiral said he approved of the reasons for neutrality as given by Premier Salandra.

Italy's neutrality was not due to unsatisfactory military conditions in this country, Admiral Betollo said, but to the fact that Italy was not obliged to follow the central empires of Europe. The former Minister added:

"Our neutrality must be strongly armed to enable us to defend the supreme interests of the country if they are threatened or unrecognized. Our neutrality should be an expression of Italy's diplomatic and military power."

The majority of those who spoke in the Chamber, especially the extreme left, tried to construe according to their own views the statement by Premier Salandra at the opening of Parliament on Thursday. The Premier at that time advised that Italy maintain an attitude of armed and watchful neutrality. Some of the speakers today urged the Government to make more explicit declarations, while others attacked the Cabinet because, they said, notwithstanding her heavy military expenses, Italy was obliged to remain neutral owing to her military unpreparedness.

Premier Salandra replied to the speakers expressing regret at the unmeasured language of some of them in judging the conflict in which the Powers are engaged. While recognizing the merits of all civilized peoples, and their contributions to the progress of the world, he said that in Parliament one sentiment is common to all, and that is love of Italy. The whole Chamber arose and applauded the Premier, crying "Viva Italia."

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The official "eyewitness with the British army headquarters on the Continent, in a narartive dated Dec. 2, says that the destruction of the Belgian town of Ypres by the Germans suggests that it was "really the outcome of disappointment and exasperation at its resistance and at the failure of the much-advertised plans for its capture."

The writer points out that up to the end of October the Germans had contented themselves with bombarding points where the British headquarters was believed to be situated and other places, such as the railway station, where destruction would be of military value.

The shelling of the town itself began in earnest only on the night of Nov. 5, after which date it was maintained intermittently. That the town escaped so long apparently was due to the fact that up till Nov. 5 the Germans had counted on capturing it. Later the attacks were simply in the nature of forlorn hopes, the narrator says, which called for all the assistance that could be obtained by artillery co-operation, even at the risk of the destruction of a historic place which might become German.

The last attack in force was delivered on Nov. 17. Four days later the Germans commenced to pour a stream of shell into the central market place, and whereas the Cloth Hall and the cathedral both had escaped material damage till then, these two historic buildings were blazing before the day closed. In order to accomplish this, it is stated, the Germans brought up a train armed with heavy guns. After the Cloth Hall and the cathedral were destroyed, the eyewitness says, the fire of the Germans no longer was directed on them.

The writer states on good authority that the Germans renamed Ostend "Kales," which, he says, was done with the object of deceiving German soldiers into the belief that Calais and Paris were in German hands. A few minor successes are recorded by the eyewitness, both the French and British forces, he says, having advanced slightly and taken some German trenches.

Militancy by Women Urged as Means to Bring Peace.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 5.—Nearly 1000 men and women assembled in the Garrick Theater today at noon, called on President Wilson to take immediate steps toward bringing the European War to a close. Mme. Rosika Schwimmer of Buda Pesth and Mrs. Pethick-Lawrence, militant suffragist leader of London, who offered the peace resolutions, urged the women present to resort to militancy as means of furthering international peace.

The meeting was the first of a series of public gatherings planned by the emergency peace committee of 30 recently appointed and headed by Miss Jane Addams.

300,000 Youths in France Called to Take Up Arms

BORDEAUX, Dec. 5.—The 300,000 youths of 18 years in France, who normally would begin service in the army in October of 1916, are by Government decree to be called to present themselves for examination beginning on the 20th of this month. Their military training probably will begin next March.

Should the necessity arise, these youths probably could be sent to the fighting line next July.

Germany Forbids Sale of Liquor in Eastern Provinces

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 5.—Germany has taken a leaf from the Czar's book in declaring through an official order that the sale of all alcoholic liquors is strictly forbidden in the Eastern provinces.

The order came as the result of recommendations made by courtsmartial which tried cases of desertion. In almost every instance the soldier declared that he acted under the influence of drink.

HOW ENGLISH AND BELGIAN RULERS MET IN FLANDERS

(Copyright, 1914, by Press Pub. Co.)

LONDON, Oct. 5.—The correspondent of the London Daily Mail in Dunkirk, France, sends the following account of the meeting of King George and King Albert on the roadside in Flanders:

"The King of the Belgians, as host, was first at the rendezvous. He was dressed in his usual quiet uniform of dark blue. As he alighted from his motor and walked toward some old cottages he waited and exchanged kindly words with the Belgian soldiers who came out of a neighboring inn to touch their hats to their monarch.

"Noon was struck from the old clock tower close by and a few moments later motor cyclists flying the Union Jack were seen buzzing along the road. Behind them were three limousine cars, all flying Union Jacks, and behind them a second motorcyclist. Cars and cyclists stopped, and from the first motor came King George. The Prince of Wales was with him.

King George wore a khaki uniform with a scarlet staff band around his hat. He looked fit and well. The two Kings moved forward with outstretched hands to greet each other. They were in a muddy road with only a few officers, soldiers and simple villagers looking on.

"Upon a canal barge on the water alongside the road a woman was hanging out her washing. All she saw was two men shaking hands, but there was a quiet earnestness about the greeting. The handshake was long and firm, accompanying the slightest smiles, like those of men who meet on serious occasions.

"Their first talk was not long. After returning the salute of a soldier, who had come up close to look on, they entered King Albert's motor car and passed on over the frontier into a little remnant of Belgium which still remains out of the enemy's clutches.

Sadakichi Hartmann, impressionistic German-Japanese art critic, versifier and dilettante, who forsook St. Louis last spring and left behind a "mere bagatelle" of unpaid obligations, has returned and last night he carried out his long-promised threat to take fitting revenge.

Sadakichi quit the town when certain social leaders, who he alleged had lionized him, failed to advance enough money to enable him to live "as befit an esthete carrying out a mission of lifting the Mississippi Valley to a higher, a loftier, and a more artistic atmosphere."

On his former visit he lived at the Buckingham Hotel and spent his evenings in solo dancing before a wealthy society set, in gay and festive hours at the Artists' Guild, and in taxicabbing about the city to exclusive functions at which, as he admits, he was the lion.

Last night a Post-Dispatch reporter found him seated in the rear of the Central Trades and Labor Hall, 2228 Olive street, listening to Emma Goldman's anarchistic lecture. This time he took a street car to his lodgings at 4209 Morgan street, where one room and an alcove do double service as studio and boudoir.

"Dirty," He Says of City.

In the introduction of his manuscript, the artist paid his respects to Charles R. Meston of 5 Kingsbury place, vice-president of the Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co., who was the "angel" of Sadakichi's former studio art class, and also footed many of the bills acquired by Sadakichi.

Referring to his failure to make the studio art class go, he says: "I had just gotten acclimated and, when I thought the moment had come for the real music to start, the sponsor generously put a stop to the playing of 'madrigals and flutes.'"

To those who criticised his eccentric personality, he replied in the words of the Pharisee, "Thank God, that I am not as they are." Defending himself from the charge that he spoke the truth on affairs both social and artistic, he rejoins, "among cannibals a missionary must be prepared to take potluck." As for the city itself, it is, in his own words, "the city of the dead fleurs de lis."

Artists' Guild Hit.

But it is upon the Artists' Guild that Sadakichi vents most of his wrath. Although "gates ajar" welcomed him there earlier in the year, although he was lionized there and "strutted his brief hour" within its exclusive environs, yet even as a father chides his child for the latter's own good, so does Sadakichi apply the tongue lash of withering criticism.

"'Tis merely a debating club, with always the same men eating and drinking," says Sadakichi. "Year in, year out, they chirp and twitter, loiter, buzz and gabble about momentous nothings. The members therein keep it exclusive with no intent but to spin themselves by endless strings of talk into a cocoon of their own."

If the facts were generally known about the Artists' Guild it would be the laughing stock of the community, he says. But the members, by keeping it exclusive, also keep "the facts" from the public, thus frustrating the laugh.

The Artistic Set.

"St. Louis artists lead a dog and cat existence," the manuscript says, "and the air is stagnation itself—more oppressive than any atmosphere that Poe could paint in words."

Sadakichi bemoans there are no true Bohemians here, and attributes it to the university connections of "so many art practitioners."

In turn and at quite some length Sadakichi pithily describes the leaders in St. Louis' artistic set, sparing none from his sarcasm. He brings to a close the manuscript with a personal allusion to his former benefactor, Meston, and these words, "Good-night, St. Louis, in pace requiescat!"

But though Sadakichi resigned St. Louis to peaceful sleep and pleasant dreams, he has returned to arouse it from its somnolence. This time, instead of catering to the few, he wishes to appear as another Ruskin or Browning, and lead the forsaken masses back to art, culture and high ideals.

Seeking New Angel.

In other words, Sadakichi, the temperamental, is seeking a new "angel." To make his lectures and art instructions open to the masses, $10,000 a year will be necessary, he says. A man willing to back him to this extent, or more, or even less, is now in demand by him. But if St. Louis will have none of it, then Sadakichi intends to publish two more works on art.

When told that several obligations left behind him in the spring had not been paid, such as a $38 board bill at the Buckingham Hotel, he replied that as Meston had withdrawn his support at the most critical moment, he would now allow Meston the opportunity to pay them, if he so desires. Otherwise Sadakichi, on his oath, will foot them himself.

BOY, 10, HIT BY TRAIN

Loses Two Teeth and Is Bruised.

Julius Laurent, 10 years old, son of Julius and Sophia Laurent of 8023 Alabama avenue, was struck by an inbound Iron Mountain passenger train at Tesson street and Ivory avenue about 6 p. m. yesterday. Two teeth were knocked out of his lower jaw and he was bruised.

He was returning from a butcher shop and apparently did not see the train, which was approaching slowly.

SCHWAB GOES TO EUROPE AFTER TALK WITH BRYAN

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The big Cunard liner Lusitania sailed today with 1190 passengers on what, as persistent rumor among shipping circles had it, will be her last trip across the Atlantic until the end of the war. Among her passengers was Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Schwab's sudden trip to England, after his conference yesterday with Secretary of State Bryan, gave color to the report from Washington that for the preservation of American neutrality Bryan had ordered the Bethlehem steel man to abrogate his contract with the British Government for guns, submarines and shells, said to total $50,000,000.

Schwab refused to affirm or deny the report.

DESERTIONS ADD TO ENGLAND'S TASK IN RAISING TROOPS

INFLUENCE OBTAINS MANY COMMISSIONS

How London Papers Which Belittled the French Executed an About-Face on Hint From the War Office.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—When the British Government announced in the first week in August that a state of war existed between itself and Germany, London was thrown into a large-sized panic. Everybody realized that, except for the fleet, the Government was totally unprepared for war. And, in addition, two of its most important men—Premier Asquith, acting as Secretary of State for War, and Prince Louis of Battenberg, First Sea Lord—had been and were objects of wide popular distrust, not to say open suspicion.

The attack on these men became ferocious; that on Asquith as War Secretary being led by no less force than the Government organ, the London Times. It quickly bore fruit, for, on Aug. 5, the day England declared war, Asquith relinquished his dual role to devote himself exclusively to the premiership, and Earl Kitchener was appointed Secretary of State for War in his stead. The attack on Prince Louis, which can be stigmatized only as cowardly, insidious and despicable, was longer in achieving its purpose.

To realize the instant change in the public mind that followed the appointment of Kitchener of Khartoum, it must be understood that throughout the length and breadth of the British Isles, if not in most of the British possessions, "K of K," as he is invariably called, is a public idol, regarded as almost omnipotent. Therefore when Kitchener's appointment was announced the stolid Britisher went to his club, drank a toast to the new war Secretary, sang "God Save the King," and "Brittania Rules the Waves," and declared that the war was over. And so it was so far as he was concerned. It was a case with him of "Kitchener will do it. We don't know just how, and don't want to know, but he will do it."

But Kitchener took no such easy view of the situation. He knew better than any man in England, with the possible exception of the late Lord Roberts, the terrible state of England's unpreparedness and that he had to make ready for the most stupendous war the world had ever known—a war that might last two or three years.

His first act was to call for 100,000 volunteers. The very smallness of this number served still further to lull the people into a sense of security. If Kitchener could do it with 100,000 extra men, they argued, the war was nothing more than a panic and would be over before Christmas.

But Kitchener knew what they didn't. He realized that the Government was unprepared to handle even 100,000 men; that it hadn't the rifles or the uniforms to equip them, that it had no place prepared to train them, and no money to do the training. So he called for 100,000 and fixed the physical standard at about the standard for admission to the Guards, a crack London regiment.

It may seem like a great presumption on my part to criticize Earl Kitchener, but I know that many persons share my views that he made a grave error in failing to arrange for the registration of every man trying to enlist who fell short of the high standard set but who, nevertheless, was capable of being made into a good soldier.

Incompetence Blocks Recruiting.

The inevitable result followed. A young man, fired with patriotism, announced that he was going to enlist; his village or neighborhood friends gave him a dinner, slapped him on the back and sent him on his way. The next day, to the amazement of his friends, he came home with the shameful admission that his country didn't want him.

He had been told he "wasn't fit." It may be that he lacked merely a fraction of a required inch or that some of his teeth needed attention, or his chest needed a trifle of expansion, but he had been curtly told that he "wouldn't do."

It matters not how urgently his country needs him at the present moment, nor how loudly it calls for him, he is not going to answer. To get that man again the Government will have to come and take him. If it had taken his name and address at the time he had volunteered and told him "We shall want you in a short time, just as soon as we can make proper provision for training and equipping you," he would have been ready and anxious for the summons.

So when Kitchener made his second call for men the response was pitiful. The extravagant boasts of the British press, the suppression of all news, especially anything that smacked of reverses, and the Britishers' feeling of absolute security because of the fleet, created an apathy and indifference that alarmed the Government.

Every sort of appeal that ingenuity could devise was made, but the men did not come forward. Then came the lowering of the standard, the talk of conscription and other details with which readers are familiar, and conditions improved. But no matter what you may hear from the other side the recruiting is not nearly what it should be, and England has not heard the last of that much dreaded word "conscription."

Men Deserting Like Flies.

And now I come to something of which no hint has been permitted to pass the British censor; that is the number of desertions among the volunteers. If the difficulty of obtaining volunteers has caused anxiety to the War Office, the number of desertions has caused something akin to consternation. I was taking tea at the home of a Major in West Kensington, who had obtained leave to run up to London every Sunday from Salisbury Plain, where he was drilling recruits and I asked about conditions down there. These are his words:

I was astonished, because I had heard no hint of such a condition, and I asked him the cause.

"Inability to take care of the men properly," was his reply. "Quite naturally, when these men volunteered and were accepted they expected that we should be ready to feed and house them. But we are not. Thank God we have had good weather, but we can't expect it to keep up, and in a week or two when bad weather comes Salisbury Plain will be a morass and then I hate to think of what may happen.

"Men have been sent down there for whom absolutely no provision had been made. There was no food for them and in lots of cases no shelter. For the first 24 hours they have had to live on what other men were willing to share with them and sleep on the ground. In my own case I have lost more than 400 men. Every effort is being made to remedy conditions, but we were and are still frightfully unprepared."

I know a young man who joined a battalion of 5000 splendid young fellows recruited from among the London schools and university graduates who are now at Epsom Downs getting their training. These men are not yet in camp, but are billeted on the townsfolks. There had been many desertions from the battalion, but the most serious wastage had been through the granting of commissions. Nearly 300 of these young, untrained, raw recruits had, through influence, received commissions.

"How soon do you think you will be ready for service?" I asked him.

"Not before the New Year," he replied. "It would be nothing short of murder to put us in the field before then."

"What is the reason?"

"Well, none of us know anything about handling a rifle; we are a long way from being properly drilled. We haven't any discipline yet, and with the constant drain made by chaps getting commissions we are not likely to be trained or disciplined for a long time."

Here is something else that has not been permitted to pass the British censor. The Canadian contingent reached England on Oct. 8, but when I left, Nov. 21, not a single Canadian had gone to the front. They were all down at Salisbury Plain except a large contingent of officers who were at the Savoy Hotel. Why? Lack of sufficient training if you can rely on what you hear at the war office.

Real Fighters Not Wanted.

I wonder what Canada would say—were she allowed to say it—to this charge that the men she sent over are not sufficiently trained. Certainly the training to be had at the Hotel Savoy is not the best kind to fit a man for the trenches and flood-soaked morasses of Flanders.

There have been two distinct occasions so far during the conduct of this war when the least likeable characteristics of the British people became so pronounced that something went out from Downing street that brought them up with a round turn. I refer to the arrogant, almost insolent, attitude of "We are the greatest people in the world." From the tone of some of the newspapers and of the talk one heard on every side one might have imagined that Britain was fighting this war alone, instead of having an army of about 140,000 men in the field, where France and Russia had their millions.

The first occasion occurred immediately following the publication of Field Marshal Sir John French's first report of the operations of the British expeditionary forces. There was in this report, as readers of the Post-Dispatch will remember, considerable reference to the disposition of part of his forces owing to the inability of French troops to come to his support, as had been promised him. The reason given by the French commander was that his horses were so exhausted that they could travel no further. While no direct accusations of failure were made against the French troops, the whole tone of British comment was to the effect that it was the British who were fighting the war distinctly intensified.

What happened immediately following this only the British and French Governments know. But word went forth from Downing street which resulted in every London newspaper printing the next day from a half column to two columns of editorial praise of the French troops. One had only to read the editorials to realize that the inspiration and the material for them came from one source.

Lord Kitchener, has frequently declared that he expects this war to last for three years. I was considerably astonished and taken aback when I was told on Nov. 18 by one of the most eminent military authorities in London that at any time during the previous month the French, Belgian and British forces could have started a movement which would drive the German army through Belgium and behind their own fortifications across the Rhine. He declared that it was the agreed strategy between Kitchener and Gen. Joffre to hold as strong a force of Germans as possible on the front in northern France and in Flanders; that the allies have the men and at any time they want can drive the Germans back, but they intend to keep them there, whittling them down day after day.

To drive them across the line would be bad tactics, because, they admit, it is a problem how long it would take the allies themselves to cross the Rhine. Once behind their fortifications, according to this authority, the Germans can hold the lines with a very small force and turn the rest of their men to the eastern arena of war. I think this surprised everyone who heard the statement as well as myself, but since then I have talked with many military men, and while they were not aware of these facts, they declared it excellent strategy.

PEOPLE'S LEAGUE HAS A NEWSPAPER TO REJUVENATE IT

First Issue Announces That Prizes Will Be Given for Attendance at Meetings.

When a man with an artificial flower in his buttonhole and with his whiskers trimmed like new-mown hay, steps on a street car carrying with him the odors of rose violet soap, heliotrope perfume and a copy of Progress and Poverty and drops 3 cents in the conductor's collection box, it will be known by these tokens that he is a prize-winning member of the rejuvenated People's League.

The league is primping up and feeling real young and giddy again. As one indication that it has the recklessness and enthusiasm of youth it has started a newspaper, the first issue of which is just off the press. In his salutatory announcement Sheridan Webter, the editor, says the paper will be published monthly, but that if circumstances warrant it may be issued weekly.

Prizes for Attendance.

As a sort of first gun in its campaign the league, as set forth in its own paper, will give prizes to those who are most regular in attendance at Sunday morning meetings at its headquarters at 810 Olive street.

Among these prizes is one which is expected to arouse keen competition in the league. It is nothing less than $2 worth of tonsorial service—two whole big dollars' worth of barbering, plain and fancy whisker trimming, hair cutting, shaving, mustache curling, face massaging, shampooing, bay rumming, et al, et cetera, ad infinitum. The People's League from now on will hew to the line, let the shavings fall where they may.

For those members of the league who do not care particularly for tonsorial service other prizes are offered. There is, for instance, a beautiful $5 kimono, with sleeve room enough for Charles L. Delbridge to make a speech in without hampering the windmill gestures for which he is famous. Then there are the rose violet soap and the heliotrope perfume, to say nothing of a $2 cake, an oil stove, 50 cents worth of Progress and Poverty and a basket of artificial flowers.

At a notable meeting of the People's League, held last summer to oppose the new city charter, only six members were present, but it is expected these attendance prizes will bring more out at future meetings.

Evidently Editor Webster takes a rosy view of the league's future. In an editorial he says: "We will have from 10,000 to 100,000 members and this will give us from $1000 to $10,000 a month, when collected. Until we reach that stage of development our financial condition must be comparatively unsatisfactory; after we reach that stage our financial strength will be tremendous."

How to Circulate a Paper.

In another editorial the editor sagely points out that placing the paper in the hands of a great number of persons is the only feasible way to give it a wide circulation.

The league is going to have social parties on Saturday nights at 3620 Finney avenue. The readers are told that ladies who attend the first of these meetings will find at least one handsome man there, in the person of George S. Tourville, chairman of the floor committee.

The People's Paper also announces that some time this winter there will be a banquet for the league's ward and precinct men. The number of covers to be laid is not made known.

There are two advertisements in the four-page paper. One is that of "Socrates at the Shoe Bench, Stephen M. Ryan, Single Tax Cobbler and Shoe Man." The other is that of Sheridan Webster, attorney at law, "services free to all who cannot pay."

"U. S. HAS BEST COAST DEFENSE; SHY ON MEN"

Gen. Weaver Says Nation Needs 10,000 More Soldiers in Her Forts.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Ten thousand more men and 564 more officers for the coast artillery were declared necessary by Brigadier-General E. M. Weaver, chief of that service, who appeared today before the House Military Affairs Committee, considering the army appropriation bill. "I think we have the best coast defense material in the world," said Gen. Weaver, "but I think it is not efficient, simply because of the lack of efficient men to manage the defenses."

Questioned by Chairman Hay, Gen. Weaver said the guns now on the coast defenses were of a pattern designed in 1890. He asserted, however, that the superior range-finding facilities of the coast defense service, its heavier projectiles, and a longer range, which might be gotten by altering the present carriage, would put the defense on equal terms with any attacking fleet. He declared that the supply of ammunition on hand for the coast defense guns was, in his opinion "reasonably prudent."

Gen. Weaver said the department's plans had not, so far, taken into consideration in coast defense work the great siege guns now in use in the European war.

IRON MOUNTAIN LOSES IN LUMBER RATE CASE

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 5.—A petition of the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain Railroad for an injunction to restrain the Interstate Commerce Commission from enforcing an order by which the Ferguson Lumber Co. of Little Rock was awarded reparation on an overcharge on lumber shipments was dismissed in the United States District Court here today. The court held the railroad should have proceeded in a court of law and not in a court of equity.

The railroad contended the order was void because the commission used as the measure of damages the difference between the rate charged and what the commission decided was a reasonable rate.

Joseph W. Folk, chief counsel for the commission, contended it had made a proper measure of damages and that the petition should be dismissed for want of equity. He said tonight the decision sustained the ruling of the commission and was of far-reaching importance.

LIVE STOCK MEN DEMAND INQUIRY INTO QUARANTINE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—A great storm is raging about the head of Secretary Houston for the way his experts have handled the foot and mouth disease epidemic that started two months ago. Thousands of protests against wholesale quarantines are coming in from Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and other states where the infection was discovered. Stock men allege that they are losing money because of the widespread quarantines, covering counties that are not in the infected zone. Hogs and cattle that should have been marketed weeks ago are still eating 75-cent corn.

Senators Burton of Ohio and Kenyon of Iowa have been requested by constituents to arrange to investigate the Department of Agriculture.

Senator Burton was at the department today to lodge a vigorous protest against the quarantine in Ohio. Senator Kenyon will make a similar protest on Monday.

The department lacks funds to meet the great emergency of the foot and mouth outbreak. It has already cost $900,000 in incidental expenses and stock valued at nearly $2,250,000 has been slaughtered by the Federal Government.

CHICAGO POLICE CAPTAIN INDICTED ON GRAFT CHARGES

Two Other Policemen Are Charged With Operating Confidence Games.

MORE TRUE BILLS LIKELY

By Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—State's Attorney Hoyne's crusade against alleged police corruption reached a climax here today with the indictment of John J. Halpin, a Captain of Police and until recently head of the Detective Bureau; Lieut. John H. Tobin, a veteran of the Police Department, and Walter O'Brien, a former detective with the rank of Sergeant. Bribery and operating confidence games are the charges in the indictments.

Indictments on Alleged Confessions.

The inidctments were based largely on alleged confessions by "Barney" Bertsche and the Ryan brothers, Frank and James. The Ryans for years conducted a string of clairvoyant parlors, out of which it alleged they fleeced many victims of tens of thousands of dollars. The indicted men are charged with protecting them in return for money considerations, ranging from $200 to $400 a week.

Bertsche is said by Hoyne to have confessed that he was the go-between who paid the Ryan money to Halpin. He was one of five men wounded in a pistol fight with Detectives Egan and Monaghan in the theater district a month ago, and alleges that the police, fearing that he was about to divulge what he knew, were trying to remove him.

Names by which the accused policemen were known among the clairvoyants, as given out by Hoyne, follows:

Capt. John J. Halpin, "Big 8."
Detective Sergt. Walter O'Brien, "Caroline."

"When O'Brien would telephone to Frank Ryan," said Mr. Hoyne, "he would say: 'Is this you, Liz (Ryan was known as 'Liz')?" "Yes."

More Red Book Secrets.

Hoyne today made public more of the secrets of Frank Ryan's two red morocco-bound books in which the record of the clairvoyant trust were kept. The common method of division of the spoils, according to the book, was 45 per cent for the swindler acting in the case, 40 per cent for the police, 10 per cent for the owner of the place and 5 per cent for the "fixer."

RECEIPTS.		PAYOUTS.
June	$911 50	June	$1,410 78
July	5,335 00	July	2,396 94
Aug. 1 to 24	6,024 50	Aug. 1 to 24	1,214 33
Total.	$15,896 00	Total..	$5,240 51

The other red book contains a record of customers and a history of their cases. Some of them were:

"Mrs. C., $83. Wants to sell her house. Did sell it. Has daughter married. Worried about daughter out West. Wants to get into hotel business. C."

("C." in the clairvoyant code means worth keeping track of and following. The money indicated represents the initial payment.)

"Sept. 11—Mr. —— C. $66. Will I have success in the real estate business? Who and when will I marry? Does the girl love me? Do I really love her? Sold him script (valueless stock) $200."

Sold Them "Script" and Notes.

"Aug. 1—C. $25 check. Who is knocking me in my position? How can I get to keep companw with Miss ——? How can I get rid of my estate? Nov. 17, gave him six months' note for $150."

"Aug. 29, 1912, $12. Wants to be a success. Shall he divorce himself from wife? Sold him script, $500."

"Oct. 16, Miss —— C. $16. In love with soldier named ——. Will I ever get money? Gave her 90-day note for $650."

"Oct. 26, Mr. —— C. $22. Is my wife true to me? In business with relative, wants to get rid of him and go in business for himself. Sold him script, $4000."

"Aug. 5, Miss —— C. $16. In love, wants luck. Aug. 27 gave her 90-days' note for $1200; Nov. 26, six months' note for $1700, destroying first note."

When the credulous victims came to collect the notes, or to receive interest on stock, either they would find the whole outfit moved or someone in charge would inform them the clairvoyant had gone to Mexico to look after investments.

HARVARD PROFESSOR HELD AS RADIO LAW VIOLATOR

Charged With Misuse of Wireless and Is Bound Over to Grand Jury.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—Fitzroy Carrington, a member of the Harvard University faculty, who was arrested a few days ago for alleged violation of the radio laws, was held for the Federal grand jury by United States Commissioner Hayes at the conclusion of a hearing today.

A similar complaint against Gilbert R. Payson Jr., 13 years old, a neighbor of Prof. Carrington, was dismissed. It is alleged Prof. Carrington allowed the Payson boy to practice upon a wireless equipment which the Professor had installed in his home for the benefit of his own son.

Radio Inspector Gawler testified that the Carrington apparatus had a radius of 100 miles and that messages sent from it interfered with commercial operators over a wide area.

POST GRADUATE STUDENT AT COLUMBIA ENDS LIFE

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Robert H. Jones, a student in Columbia University, was found dead today in a room of the Hotel Marie Antoinette. He shot himself to death.

For the last three years Jones, who came from Salado, Tex., after taking a law course in the Texas University, had been a post-graduate student at Columbia. He was graduated in law last spring and took up political science. He lived in Livingston Hall, a Columbia College dormitory, where a younger brother, Paul, lives. An older brother is Dr. Edward H. Jones, a practicing physician at 155 West Fifty-eight street.

Jones, who was 25 years old, took a great interest in the suffrage movement, and up to a week ago was secretary of a suffrage club. He resigned, saying that the work was no longer to his liking.

In his pockets were a small amount of money and two letters, one from his father in Austin, Tex., and another from his sister, Clara Louise, in Virginia. In her letter the sister scolded Jones for not writing oftener.

BRYAN TAKES UP PROTESTS AGAINST ARIZONA STATUTE

Gov. Hunt Agrees to Postpone Proclamation of Anti-Alien Employment Law.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—In the absence of official advices Secretary Bryan refused to comment tonight on Gov. Hunt's message announcing his decision to postpone the proclamation of Arizona's new anti-alien employment law pending further communications from the State Department.

Formal protests against the Arizona law were lodged with the department today by the British and Italian Ambassadors and a message was sent to Gov. Hunt asking if he had authority to postpone action. Bryan listened with interest to the text of the Governor's reply as carried in Associated Press Dispatches.

The Arizona anti-alien law requires a minimum of 80 per cent of the employes of any person or corporation in the State to be citizens of the United States.

The British protest attacks the law as in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United Sates. The Italian protest cites the commercial treaty between Italy and the United States ratified in 1871.

In reply the State Department notified both embassies it had taken steps to obtain complete information as to the anti-alien act.

Arizona Governor Agrees to Postpone Issuing Proclamation.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Dec. 5.—Gov. Hunt telegraphed to the State Department at Washington today that he was averse to interfering with the operation of the Arizona law which forbids the employment of more than one foreigner in every five employes in any business in the State, but added that owing to "the international aspect given by the protest of Italian and British embassies he would await further advices from the Department."

MINE PRESIDENT REPUDIATES STRIKE PAMPHLET IN PART

He Admits Colorado Fuel Company Had 40,000 Published and Circulated.

By Associated Press.

DENVER, Dec. 5.—"Facts concerning the struggle in Colorado for industrial freedom," a pamphlet issued by the "Coal Mine Managers" and which J. F. Welborn, president of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Co., said his corporation had had written by an unnamed writer, was investigated by the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations today.

Welborn testified that the Colorado Fuel and Iron Co. published the document at an expense of $12,000, and distributed 40,000 copies to ministers, legislators, educators and the public. After assuming responsibility for the pamphlet, Welborn acknowledged that several paragraphs should be qualified, that of the truth of others he had no evidence and repudiated responsibility for still other statements.

The witness declined to give the name of the author of the pamphlet who, he said, came to Colorado to write the book after a conversation with an Eastern director. He did not know who was to pay the writer.

Questioned Regarding Statements.

Chairman Walsh questioned Welborn regarding a statement in the pamphlet that at some of the mines of the company from 90 to 99 per cent of the miners, before the strike was called, signed papers expressing satisfaction with working conditions and opposing the strike. Welborn said that at the Rouse mines 99 per cent of the miners signed the statement, but that 40 per cent went out when the strike was called at the Tercio, Morley and Primer mines; he said 90 per cent signed, but considerably less than that percentage remained at work.

Regarding a statement in the pamphlet to the effect that the company had investigated men hired for guards Welborn said this investigation had been left to the head of the agency through which the guards were employed.

Walsh called the attention of the witness to a table appearing in the pamphlet, giving the sums alleged to have been paid to national officers of the United Mine Workers. According to this table sums paid out in nine weeks were as follows: Frank J. Hayes, $4502, plus $1667 for expenses; John McLennan, $2683, plus $1469 for expenses; John R. Lawson, $1773; Mary Jones, $2668.

"Do you accept personal responsibility for this?" asked Walsh.

"For as much of the published statement as has not been denied replied Welborn.

"If it is true that McLennan gets $4 a day will you correct it?"

"Just as soon as I believe it is wrong."

Commissioner O'Connell observed that the figures given were from the report of William Green, secretary of the United Mine Workers and covered total salary and expenses for one year, not nine months.

Repudiating Responsibility.

The statement in the pamphlet which alleged that the delegates to the Trinidad convention that called the strike were selected and sent there by the officers of the union, Welborn declared he could not substantiate.

"I repudiate the responsibility for the statement," he said.

"The pamphlet stated that of the $500,000 the employes of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. had on deposit with the company, only 20 per cent had been withdrawn. Under cross-examination Welborn said that of the total sum only $60,000 was on demand notes and of this $30,000 was the property of wage-earning employes of the fuel department—miners.

The total loss to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. caused by the strike was $800,000, Welborn said.

"Is there anyone else you communicated with in New York except John D. Rockefeller Jr.?" Chairman Walsh of the Federal Industrial Relations Commission asked President Welborn when he resumed his testimony today. Welborn said he had heard from George J. Gould and others of the seven New York directors of the company.

Asked to Produce Telegrams.

"To save time, I shall ask you to file with us all the telegrams you have received from Mr. Rockefeller, Star J. Murphy and Jerome Green," said the chairman.

"I will bring all the telegrams I have," replied Welborn.

The witness then identified a telegram from John Rockefeller, made public yesterday by John R. Lawson of the United Mine Workers.

The telegram advised Welborn to make capital with the public out of the refusal of the miners to accept a proposal of settlement made by the Governor of Colorado.

Welborn yesterday told of his first experience with strikes since he became connected with the company, 25 years ago. This strike occurred in 1894. Guards and deputized Sheriffs were employed, he testified, to protect the property of the company, as they were in the present strike.

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 5.—Samuel H. Baker, a Denver attorney, has reached Thompson, Utah, after having been lost for four days on the Utah desert, without food or water. BIG CHIEF BENDER HAS JOINED FEDS, BALTIMORE HEARS

MAY GO TO BROOKLYN

Connie Mack Says Former Reliance's Jump Was No Surprise to Him.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—Charles A. Bender, the great Indian pitcher of the Philadelphia Athletics today signed a Federal League contract and will play with either Brooklyn or Baltimore.

The big Chief is the second star pitcher of the former world's champions to jump to the Federals this week, Eddie Plank having signed a contract at Gettysburg, Pa., last Wednesday to play with the St. Louis club.

Bender tonight confirmed the report that he had gone over to the Federals. He said he met Harry Goldman of the Baltimore club, here today and lost no time in signing.

"The terms of the contract are very satisfactory and it is the best thing I ever did in my life," said the Chief. "The contract is to run for two years."

Bender said he knew others who were going to sign Federal League contracts, but refused to disclose their identity.

Connie Mack, manager of the Athletics, said he was not surprised when told that Bender had gone over to the Federal League.

"I expected it," he added. "His contract with Philadelphia expired this year, and I did not intend to renew it. Bender was simply under reserve and the matter is entirely up to him. I made no arrangements or entered into any deal for Bender for next year. I had asked for waivers on him, Plank and Coombs."

Bender joined the Athletics in 1903. He was born in 1883 at Brainard, Minn., and attended Carlisle, later entering Dickenson College. He was the only Athletic pitcher to win in the World's series with the Giants in 1905. Bender is still considered to be in his prime as a pitcher.

It is thought that efforts will be made to have Jack Coombs of the Athletics join Bender and Plank in their jump to the Federal League.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 5.—Chief Bender, the great Indian hurler of the Athletics, signed a Federal League contract today, according to a telegram received at the Federal League headquarters here from Harry Goldman, secretary of the Baltimore Feds.

Bender will not pitch for the Terrapins.

Roger After Second Sacker.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Plans for a trade which will bring a star second-baseman to the Chicago Nationals were made today by President Charles Thomas and his manager, Roger Bresnahan. Both leave tomorrow for New York to attend the National League meeting Tuesday, when they hope to obtain the player needed to fill the hole made vacant by the trade of Johnny Evers. Neither would discuss the player they had in mind.

WESTERN TRAP SHOOT FOR 1915 COMING HERE

At the annual meeting of the Interstate Association, the governing body of organized trapshooting of the United States, held in New York yesterday, the Missouri Athletic Association was awarded the Western handicap tournament for next season. Except the Grand American Handicap, this is the most important event in the trapshooting world.

This will be the first interstate handicap shoot ever held in St. Louis. The Missouri Athletic Association was successful in securing the 1915 Missouri State Tournament and with the announcement of the big Western handicap shoot, to be held next year, the St. Louis shooters will get an early start next spring, in order for them to be among the winners in these important events. The club grounds located in St. Louis County, Etzel and Ferguson avenues, will be equipped with five automatic traps, to take care of the large attendance.

The Grand American Handicap will be held at Chicago, Ill. The shoot will be held in Grant Park, which is located in the heart of the city. The Southern Handicap will be held at Memphis, Tenn. St. Louis did not apply for either of these events.

According to a new agreement these three universities each will meet the other three times and the championship will be decided on percentage basis. The schedule follows:

TRENDALL READY FOR "COMEBACK" AT FUTURE CITY

St. Louis Lightweight Meets Patsy Drouillar Tuesday After Long Rest.

By Harry S. Sharpe,

Harry Trendall, for a long time rated as the best lightweight boxer in St. Louis, and Pat Drouillard of Windsor, Canada, will furnish the main attraction at the Future City Athletic Club on next Tuesday night.

Except for a mediocre six-round bout he boxed with "Cyclone" Tommy Daly at Alton, Ill., a short while ago, Trendall has not appeared in the ring since he boxed Bobby Waugh of Fort Worth, Tex., at the Future City A. C. on March 25 of this year, defeating the Texan by cleverly out-pointing him for eight rounds.

Two weeks prior to that, before the same club, Trendall had been out-pointed by Waugh. His defeat at that time was attributed to poor condition. On Jan. 28 Trendall had boxed John Kern and out-pointed him, but failed to knock him out.

The foregoing constitutes Trendall's record so far, this year. In April he was matched with Leo Kelly before the National A. C., the bout to take place on April 24, but when he and Kelly had entered the ring and were making ready to box, the police prevented it from taking place, alleging that tickets had been sold to persons not members of the club.

Recently Trendall took up training and notified President Tommy Sullivan of the Future City A. C. that he was ready to make a match with anyone selected for him, and Sullivan secured Drouillard. The latter was seen here against Leo Kelly on the night of Oct. 14, last, but came here on short notice and in poor condition. Although he secured a draw with Kelly, the bout was a poor one and far below the standard of what Drouillard has proved himself capable of. The Canadian has met some good men, including "Knockout" Brown, Danny Goodman, Steve Ketchel, Mickey Sheridan, Frankie White, Billy Wagner and others and has succeeded in establishing a good record.

One thing seems certain: If Drouillard doesn't come here this time and do better than he did against Leo Kelley, he's in for a trimming, as Trendall is just a bit anxious to show some of his critics that he hasn't gone back, despite a wee bit of suspicion that he has.

Trendall and Drouillard have agreed to make 135 pounds at 3 o'clock.

For the semi-final, "Cyclone" Tommy Daly will measure arms with "Scotty" McMurdo for eight rounds at 145 pounds. Last Tuesday night McMurdo was accidentally fouled by John Kern during the first round, but is in good condition now and ready to perform.

Daly wants to redeem himself for the comical-looking bout he boxed two weeks ago with "Sailor" Plummer, when the sailor hurt his hand in the fifth round and was obliged to quit.

Jimmy Carney and Eddie Holly will appear in the preliminary at 124 pounds. Little is known of Holly here, but Harry Trendall, who saw him box on the Pacific Coast, stamps him as O K.

By Herbert Reed,

The Post-Dispatch's Eastern Football Authority.

Reed's All-Eastern Team

GUARDS—Pennock, Harvard; Trenckmann, Princeton; Eels, Williams.

CENTERS—McEwan, Army; Journay, Pennsylvania.

QUARTERBACKS—Pritchard, Army; Logan, Harvard.

FORWARD PASS BATTERIES—Prichard and Merillat; LeGore and Ainsworth.

LATERAL PASS EXPERTS—LeGore and Ainsworth.

PLACE KICKERS—Mahan, LeGore, Eels.

IN selecting an all-Eastern eleven it is inevitable that full justice cannot be done short of twenty-five or thirty men, for that is about the number used by the foremost teams in their big games. With few exceptions I have every man chosen for the all-Eastern in action, and I have picked others whom I have not had the opportunity to see on the advice of capable coaches and players.

Hardwick of Harvard is the greatest allround man playing football. He is a perfect offensive end because of his winderful individual interference, and a good defensive man whether played in his regular position or in the back field. O'Hearn of Cornell plays much the same type of game. He is a valuable asset to the Ithacans against Michigan because of his ability to mow down the secondary defense, and while, perhaps, not quite so fast down the field as a few of the other high-class ends, was of the utmost allround value to his team. On the attack Hardwick proved a capable receiver of the forward pass, especially when the pass was used as a scoring play.

There were two other allround ends in the East who did their best work in their big games. Merillat of the Army got away with the forward pass just as he did last year, ran well from his position, and fitted nicely into the Army's form of attack. Higgins of Penn. State, a big man and a fast one, was handicapped a great part of the season by injuries, and so was not always able to do himself justice. I have selected him largely on the recommendation of the men who have played against him.

Ballin Heads Tackles.

BALLIN of Princeton was far and away the best tackle of the season. Because of the fact that Princeton was playing up-hill football in its big games he was called upon to do more work than most tackles, and he did it extremely well. He was one of those rare players among forwards known as a "line leader." Toohey of Rutgers was one of the year's best tackles. He made trouble for every team he played against, and was especially good on the offense. Many of the best Rutgers played were put over on his side of the line and in downfield work, covering Tallmann's kicks. He measured up with the best. Weyand of the Army and Trumbull of Harvard were among the foremost tackles in the East. The Harvard man carried the burden of the acting captaincy, something of a burden in itself, considering the situation at Cambridge this year. It was as much due to Trumbull as to anyone else that the Yale lateral passing did not do more damage. The system, of course, was right, but the man counted just the same.

Pennock Without a Peer.

PENNOCK of Harvard is one of the best guards that has ever played football. Here is another natural line leader. Naturally very powerful, he was also one of the masters of the keen thinking Harvard defense. I have picked Eddie Trenkmann of Princeton largely for his fine headwork in the Princeton-Dartmouth game. Any man who gets through on a blocked kick and knows enough to cut down a member of the defense and let his teammates pick up the ball for a touchdown is not the type to keep off a first-class eleven.

Eels of Williams, a kicking guard, would be useful to any first-class team, not alone because of his ability as a guard, but because of his long distance punting and placement kicking. In any system of offense it is well to have a lineman who can kick. With such a man it is possible to vary the offense greatly. He can be drawn back not alone, as a kicker, but also as a threat.

Two First Rank Centers.

TWO centers stood out head and shoulders above the ranks this season. McEwan of the Army, I think, had probably the hardest charge of any man playing the pivot position, and was also one of the best passers. Journay of Pennsylvania was of especial value on the defense. He was the best man on the Quaker eleven in diagnosing plays and he shifted his position from time to time to meet the varied Cornell offense. Journay's work had a deal to do with the "come-back" of the Quaker eleven against Cornell and his all-around play makes him indispensable to any All-Eastern eleven, in my judgment.

Prichard a Great General.

PRICHARD of the Army is first choice for quarter, because of what for lack of a better term might be called "super-generalship." The generalship of Logan of Harvard might be described as a habit. The Army man, however, went further, with much the same tools with which to work and varied his choice of plays perhaps a trifle better. Either man would be a great deal better than satisfactory.

Mahan an Allround Star.

THERE is no end of backs fit to play on a standard team. Mahan of Harvard comes first, because of his value in the "long-gainer" plays, through his natural ability, his kicking on both offense and defense and his consequent ability to make ground from the kick formations. I do not think there is a better punter in opponent's territory in the colleges. Furthermore, he is reliable. Day by day he plays the same game, whether it be against Bates, Maine or Yale.

Bradlee of the same eleven was one of the best ground gainers of the season. A hard runner, he was none the less effective in defense and at the head of interfeernce. Barrett of Cornell, probably the best long distance

C. B. C. TO MEET ANOTHER TARTAR IN "ALL-STARS"

Coach Ward Says He Will Have Full Team in Charity Game This Afternoon.

Heine Lindsay, the dynamic leader of the All-Stars, an aggregation of football players who will oppose the Christian Brothers' College eleven at Sportsman's Park this afternoon in a benefit game for Father Dempsey's Workingman's Hotel, stated last night that he expected a victory over the collegians.

"I think we have in Magner, Zachritz, Ratican and Morrell a backfield that will compare very favorably with Rolla's," said Lindsay, "and I know our line will not suffer by comparison with the collegians. The All-Stars are in fine condition and should win on the bit."

The game today will begin at 2:30 promptly and Coach Ward says he will have all his regulars on the job. None of them were seriously injured in the Rolla game, although Alhstrom and Shanks were badly used up. Lindsay's stars will line up as follows: Roche, left end; Coultas, left tackle; Callaghan, left guard; Menges, center; Spanholtz, right guard; Joern, right tackle; Abeken, right end; Magner, quarterback; Zachritz, left halfback; Ratican, right halfback; Morrell, fullback.

Bob Thomas of Ohio State has been selected as referee, Homer Thomas of Purdue will act as umpire and Willis Johnson of St. Louis University will be head linesman.

Only Three Association Clubs Losers This Year, Despite Federal League

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Three clubs in the American Association made money in the season of 1914, it was announced today by President T. M. Chivington, who is back at League headquarters after his wedding trip. Two clubs broke even or better, two others lost money, but not discouraging amounts, and the eighth city, St. Paul, undoubtedly was a heavy loser, Mr. Chivington said.

Milwaukee, Louisville and Columbus were named as the trio which had a profitable season. Cleveland and Minneapolis broke even. Kansas City lost money and so did Indianapolis and St. Paul. The Kansas City club owners say their loss was not heavy, but the Indianapolis club lost $40,000, according to the stockholders' own estimate. President Chivington believes park improvements and purchased players were included in this statement. St. Paul's losses have been estimated as high as $50,000.

C. B. C. MAKES FIRST DOWN TWICE DURING BATTLE WITH ROLLA

By W. J. O'Connor.

IF the collegiate football championship of Missouri dangled from the thread of victory in yesterday's widely-exploited battle between the Rolla Miners and Christian Brothers' College, the title today rests with the invaders from down state. Rolla won in a romp, four touchdowns to one; score, 27 to 6.

At no time during the game did C. B. C. prove anything like equal to its adversary; never was the ultimate outcome in doubt. Withal C. B. C. achieved the honor of crossing Rolla's goal—a feat no other team in Missouri or the Southwest could accomplish this campaign. But there's a stain on this touchdown, a big, black blot, underneath which is written "fluke."

In the early stages of the third period Fullback Rodgers of the local eleven intercepted a forward pass, brushed past the first line of Rolla's defense and thundered 70 yards towards the Miners' inviolate goal line. Imlay, the Minors' star halfback, gave chase, despite a big handicap, overtok the C. B. C. runner, but was spilled by Gallagher as he dove for a shoestring tackle and the touchdown was written into the records—the first touchdown of the season against the State champions. The subsequent goal was missed.

College Team Lacks Punch.

Aside from this wicked thrust the C. B. C. attack was punchless. The fleet feet of Norbert Sacksteder were fettered by the mud, while the vicious plunges of Shea and Rodgers were knocked away by a defense which nobody thought Rolla possessed; a solid, well organized defense that followed the ball and smothered the runner.

Withal the game was keen and immensely appreciated by 2300 intensely cultured football fans, who braved pneumonia weather to see a struggle that was advertised for the State title.

Through mud and through mire, C. B. C. fought bravely—and sometimes viciously—but in the end fell back to the trench of bitter defeat, a complete wreck. Substitutions were made often in the first line of the local team's defense, substitutions caused by the murderous attacks of Copley, Freeman and Bland and occasionally by the referee, who banished two of the C. B. C. boys for alleged undue roughness.

Rolla Makes One Change.

Only one change was made in the Rolla lineup, Steele going in for Wilson who was banished with Rodgers after a passage of arms between the two. All the other stalwarts of the mining eleven fought from the first to the final whistle without as much as taking out time. Indeed, the team was physically fit, geared high and driven at a pace that knew no bounds.

Post-Mortems

REFEREE DENNIE: "The game was very hard played. I do not think that any of the players of either team was intentionally rough. However, some of the boys forgot themselves. Rolla has a good team, but I do not think that the players were in the best of condition."

MANAGER BLAND of Rolla: "I am satisfied. We expected to win, but not as easily as we did. The game was very hard played. The wet gridiron did hinder the C. B. C. team some, but, remember, it also was unfavorable to the Miners. I think we would have defeated C. B. C. every bit as bad as we did had the gridiron been dry."

COACH WARD of C. B. C.: "The better team won. The Miners are an excellent bunch of football players. Of course I think that my men would have shown up much better on a dry field. The officiating was absolutely abominable. I do not say this as an alibi."

CAPT. SHEA of C. B. C.: "Rolla has a fine team and I must say that they outplayed us. Only I would like to get a chance at them on a dry field. I think we would have an even chance at defeating them. We all played below our standard."

W. Essman Hurled Back Rolla Plays Before Officials Put a Ban on Him

IT was a lopsided fight. Only twice during the long struggle did C. B. C. make first downs, these coming in the waning moments of the final quarter as darkness, with a blanket of fog, settled over the field. This collapse of the College attack was the outstanding feature.

Where was Sacksteder? Where were Rodgers and Shea and the gaping holes big Walter Essman figured to open?

They were smothered, one and all, buried deep in the mud; literally roped, thrown and tied. But we must give Essman credit for great defensive play. Not infrequently he bent back the Rolla flank attacks, knocked down the runner and smothered a thrust off tackle. He stood out as the only man who lived up to the reputation bestowed upon him by an over-optimistic following and it was not long after the first period that the alert Mr. Kiskadden learned the wisdom of directing his big siege shots somewhere else than at the left side of C. B. C.'s line. But as the game wore on in its agony for the locals, Essman, his pride wounded, committed a foul that caused his withdrawal. Then Rolla tangoed through at will.

Yesterday Rolla presented a stronger, more virile attack and a better built defense than it showed in its two previous sorties here, against St. Louis U. and Washington. Indeed, St. Louis U. made 18 first downs while Washington made six, against C. B. C.'s two, but neither in the Washington nor in the St. Louis U. battle did Rolla play such a vicious game as it did yesterday.

So smooth was its running attack, its passing, and the split plays built around Imlay, who can outrun Sacksteder or anybody else seen in St. Louis in years, so smooth and so potent, that many wiseacres came away fully convinced that a picked team from all three local schools couldn't even make a fight interesting.

Imlay the Best Gainer.

Pitt Bland, the blond giant, plowed his way through the C. B. C. line like a runaway steam roller. Freeman and Copley, battering rams weighing 200 pounds, with the speed of men 50 pounds lighter, maimed those who came in their way; but above all towered Imlay, the lithe lightweight who steps higher and runs faster than anybody in the Missouri Valley, if we are to take Eddie Klein's word for it.

Imlay's bones must be made of steel, his muscles of wire, while in each heel is concealed 60-h. p. engines that hit on six cylinders without a miss. Despite the mud and the enemy, he got away time and again for long runs and was downed only when more than one man nailed him. With him and his big running mate, Freeman, Rolla built up an attack like Notre Dame threw around Eichenlaub and Dorais, who have been seen here. Imlay, in our humble opinion, excels Dorais doing everything but kicking.

Gallagher's Tactical Error Gives Miners Their First Scoring Chance

ONE feature which impressed the impartial spectator was the partisan spirit of the crowd, which was big, weather conditions considered. Rolla seemed to have the majority of followers, because among those who rooted for the Miners were seen a few [illegible] Louis U. and Washington pla[illegible]ne of whom were sanguine i[illegible] efforts to pull "over a Rolla vict[illegible]y."

When the players came on the field it was easy to determine at first glance that Rolla had an advantage in weight. Nowhere in the C. B. C. squad were seen such towering giants as Copley, Freeman and Houston, and after the first play was run it was almost time to cash all bets. And it might be parenthetically stated that not a few bets [illegible]e made, a number of smart guys losing substantial bank rolls.

Bland Loses Sweater.

But after the preliminaries were dispensed with C. B. C. kicked, a dribble kick, to Mountjoy, who came back 10 yards. On the first play, Bland hit Devereux's end for six yards and was tackled so hard that his sweater was torn completely from his back. He retired to the side lines and donned a new sweater, whereupon Referee Dennie stopped play to warn the combatants against rough tactics. He seemed to have felt the pulse of the participants in this early reception accorded Bland.

There was an early exchange of kicks—punts in which Rodgers of C. B. C. got better distance, but Kiskadden of Rolla attained the height and as a result C. B. C. lost heavily on the exchange. The ends of both sides showed good downfield tackling, seldom missing their man, but Imlay and Kiskadden came back faster and more regularly than Sacksteder and Gallagher, who seemed stunned.

Gallagher's Fatal Blunder.

And it was during this exchange of punts that Quarterback Gallagher made a tactical blunder that gave greater impetus to the Rolla attack. After eight minutes of play, C. B. C. took the ball in midfield and Shea hit the line for four yards. Sacksteder was thrown for a loss of two yards, but Rodgers made six through center. It was the fourth down with two yards to go. Gallagher's one play was to kick, but he elected, sad to state, to make another jab straight through. Pitt Bland, a great defensive player in this game at least, galloped forward and smoth-

OUTLAW FOOTBALL LEAGUE WILLING TO BE ORGANIZED

Soccer Leagues Call Off Sunday Contests to Aid Charity Game

THE soccer "war" in St. Louis will be called off, temporarily, today by an agreement among the officials of the local soccer leagues. The games were postponed by the "magnates" to allow the charity game arranged between the C. B. C. team and Harry Lindsay's all-stars to have full swing this afternoon at Sportsman's Park.

The Robison Field league declared its games off early in the week. At a meeting of the Federal Soccer League held Friday evening it was decided to follow suit. The postponed games of the soccer league will be played at a later date.

The Robison Field Soccer League, the "outlaws" of the local football colony, are "really and truly" ready to enter into peace agreements with their rival "organized" league. This was announced Saturday by representatives of the Robison Field League. It was stated the "outlaws" have filed application for membership in the United States Football Association, which controls the Federal Soccer League, in intention announced earlier in the week.

Little can be accomplished by the acceptance of the Robison Field League application until after the holiday games have been played. This is due to the fact that the Federal Soccer League has practically signed for games with the Niagara Falls, N. Y., soccer team for the Christmas attraction, while the New Years opponent will be chosen from either the Pullmans or the Hyde Parks of Chicago.

It was hoped by the fans that the two leagues would come to an agreement so as to provide an inter-league series.

When asked if there was any chance of an inter-league series, provided the Robison Field Soccer League was accepted by the national body, a Fed park leader said:

"We have practically closed for our holiday attractions and we cannot call them off at this late date without the consent of the teams involved."

Hist! A Noise Like Peace.

The application of the Robison Field League was received by Secretary Barrett of the Missouri Division of the national body Friday and it, with the roster of the players now participating in the games at Robison Field were forwarded to the "emergency" executive committee of the United States Football Association in New York.

A reply is expected in a few days and Secretary Barrett will then call a meeting to decide whether or not there will be peace here among the two rival football leagues.

A question that will have to be decided with the application of the Robison Field League for admission to the association is what shall be done with the cases of the soccer players now participating in games at Robison Field, who were "blacklisted" by the association for "jumping" from the organized fold last season.

Brothers' Team Excels Miners in but One Feature--Kicking

It was Rolla's ball on C. B. C.'s 48-yard line. Imlay got around Lynn's end for 20 yards behind a rolling interference. Bland failed on a straight buck. A forward pass then was grounded. Another went wrong, but on the fourth down with 12 yards to gain, Kiskaddon "crossed" the Collegians by hurling a forward pass to Mountjoy, who made it first down on C. B. C.'s 18-yard line. Freeman was hurled through center for five. Bland added three and Imlay made it first down, putting the ball on C. B. C.'s seven-yard line with the goal to gain. Bland made four and Imlay then criss-crossed through tackle for the first touchdown. Kiskaddon kicked goal. Score: Rolla 7, C. B. C. 0.

After this play it was a merry romp for the visitors. On the kickoff Imlay came back 30 yards and another drive was started for the C. B. C. goal, but this was arrested when Sacksteder intercepted a forward pass, but the quarter ended with the ball in Rolla's possession on C. B. C.'s 35-yard line, all the play having been in the locals' territory.

Second Quarter.

Rolla, when play was resumed in the second quarter, rushed the ball to C. B. C.'s three-yard line, where they were held for downs. Rodgers kicked from behind his goal line, but Imlay came back to the 15-yard line. A fumble gave the ball to C. B. C. on its own 15-yard line. One thrust at the Miner line failed and Rodgers fell back for a kick. The pass was bad and Wilson broke through, nailing Rodgers on his own five-yard line. On the second down, Rodgers kicked to Imlay, who was nailed in his tracks by Devereux.

Copley was called back and he ground out a 17-yard gain, putting the ball on C. B. C.'s 30-yard line. Imlay hit Devereux's end for five and Bland added two. Then came an almost weird play.

The Miners tried a delayed double pass, but the C. B. C. ends almost had it smothered when Imlay, with quick wit, hurled the ball down the field. Mountjoy was under it and with good interference from Houston and Copley, raced 15-yards for the second touchdown. Kiskadden kicked the goal with his left foot.

Sporadic attacks by Freeman and Copley, the huskies of the visitors, made a few important gains for Rolla before the half ended with the ball in the Miners' possession well down into C. B. C. territory.

Third Quarter.

When the second half began, C. B. C. for a few minutes showed a better defense. Rolla received the kickoff, but promptly punted. A fumble by Shea on the first down gave Rolla the ball on C. B. C.'s 35-yard line. Essman threw Bland for a loss and Devereux slipped through and upset Imlay without a gain. Copley was called back and hit Shanks' tackle for eight yards. Then on the fourth down, Kiskadden tried a forward pass, to the weak side.

Rodgers crossed over on the run, jumped high for the ball and started along the sidelines with nobody to stop him and Gallagher to help him. Here, Imlay showed his speed. From away off to the side he began pursuit race, 15 yards behind the elusive Rodgers. Before Rodgers had traveled 30 yards on his memorable 70-yard run, Imlay was almost at his heels. Imlay gained and dived in front of the runner, but Gallagher also dived, turned Imlay off and Rodgers breezed over the line with the only touchdown made against the Miners this season. Goal was missed, but the inviolate record of the Miner juggernaut was stained.

C. B. C. again kicked off, this time to Freeman, who caught the ball on his own five-yard line and returned 30 yards. Bland ripped off eight on an end run, but Rolla kicked and Sacksteder fell on the ball on his own 20-yard line. Two tries on the line failed and Rodgers punted to Imlay, who returned to C. B. C.'s 40-yard line.

Imlay Gains 8 Yards.

Imlay tore off eight yards on a wide end run. Freeman added four, and there was a fight after which the officials banished Rodgers and Wilson, the participants. Rolla, realizing that C. B. C. lost its kicker in Rodgers, smartly elected to punt on the second down. Sacksteder came back to his 25-yard line when he fell. A forward pass failed and Shea was thrown for a loss. Then Devereux kicked to Imlay, who was stopped on Rolla's 43-yard line.

Freeman made five through the line and Copley ground out a gain of 15. Bland ran roughshod through Essman's tackle for 20 just to prove it could be done, but a penalty on the next play brought the ball back 15 yards.

However, Imlay skirted right end for a long detour netting 23 yards, and first down on C. B. C.'s 13-yard line. Bland made five and Imlay tacked on four. Copley catapulted through for a bare gain of two and first down, with five to go for the goal line. Bland made three, but Imlay, with a close C. B. C. defense, couldn't gain. Freeman, however, on two charges through center, went over for a touchdown. Kiskaddon missed goal with his left boot.

Fourth Quarter.

That finished the scoring in the third period, but the Miners, hungry for gore, added their final touchdown in the fourth period when the Collegians were weakened by the absence of Essman, Rodgers and Shea.

There was considerable kicking, but it came to pass that Rolla got the ball on C. B. C.'s 45-yard line. Copley made 15, whereupon Imlay added seven. C. B. C. was penalized 15 yards for tripping and Esman was put out of the game. There was a long delay, but play was resumed with the ball in Rolla's possession on C. B. C.'s 13-yard line. Freeman made four and fumbled, but Kiskaddon recovered. Copley made it first down and Freeman ripped through center for the final touchdown.

After this the Miners kicked to the Brothers, who came back 30 yards, Sacksteder carrying the ball. Sacksteder, on a double pass, made first down for the first time and two gains through the line again gave the locals first down, but time was called with the ball in midfield.

Freeman Plays With Broken Rib; Bland Thinks Faculty May Relent

EARL FREEMAN, the 200-pound fullback of the Miners, admitted last night that he played through the second half of yesterday's battle with a broken rib.

"I was rammed in the ribs in the early part of the second quarter and felt a piercing pain there," said Freeman, "but I stayed in because we aimed to go through the game without a substitution. You know some folks said we weren't in condition and if the referee hadn't so ordered Wilson would never have been taken out, giving us only eleven regulars for the entire struggle."

Freeman's mishap probably explains why Copley was used so frequently in the second half. The big tackle was called back when a short gain was needed and he almost invariably made a big gain.

C. C. (Pitts) Bland, manager and halfback of the Rolla team, when questioned as to the manner in which the team expected to be received on its return to Rolla, stated:

"The boys all are of the opinion that we will be suspended. However, I think the fact that we played a good clean game and won, will tend to have the faculty reinstate us. The game was undoubtedly the greatest advertisement that Rolla has had in years.

"Everything was run off in tiptop shape. The game was clean and played as it should have been. We were treated well by C. B. C. and certainly appreciate all that the college has done for us."

The large deficit that has been in the C. B. C. treasury for the past two years was not made up yesterday, as was expected. The inclement weather conditions kept the crowd down from what would have been eight or ten thousand to 2300 persons. This is the official count, including the passes issued.

Rolla was guaranteed $1000. The admission per person was $1. After all expenses, including park rent, officials' fees, band and expenses of the Rolla team, it may be seen that there was very little left for the College.

The visiting team had a quite a large following. Several hundred persons formed a cheering body, which easily out-lunged the C. B. C. stands. Between halves quite a number paraded about the water-soaked field, forming a snake parade.

The game was interrupted from time to time by long wordy wars. At the start of the game a fistic encounter between Rodgers and Wilson was in the making when interrupted by the officials. Both were ordered from the field, but refused to leave. After some arguing Dennie threatened to stop the game unless the men retired. They did. Walter Essman and Lynn also balked when put out of the game, but finally decided to obey orders.

VAN GENT MAKES GOOD IN COACHING TIGER FRESHMEN

Former Wisconsin Star Will Also Take Charge of Basketball Squad.

By Philip Bradley,

Missouri U. Representative of the Post-Dispatch.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Dec. 5.—Missouri this year through Coach Brewer has added another stellar man to its coaching staff in Eugene VanGent. VanGent hails from Wisconsin University where, among other things, he was the holder of nine "W's," three in football, three in track and three in basket ball. In basket ball he was picked last year as All-Western center. He stands about 6 feet 2 inches in his shoes and weighs, when in trim, slightly over 200 pounds. He will coach the Tiger basket ball team this winter.

During the three years that VanGent player on the Wisconsin five, his team lost one game of the 35 played; and three times successively they brought a championship to their school.

This is what Chris Steinmetz says of VanGent: "I do not hesitate to say that he was the most versatile man in the Conference. His record bears me out in this as he scored more goals than any other player. Nature endowed him with a physique admirably adapted for hard and close play. Over as speedy and heady a player as Stadsvold of Minnesota he scored 6 goals on his home court, while his opponent got 1. Because of his good generalship and his style of playing, I would make him captain of the All-Star team." VanGent headed the Conference in the matter of field goals, with 40 to his credit, as compared with 8 scored against him by his opponents.

VanGent Freshman Coach.

"Gene" coached the freshman football team this fall and turned out a team which was able to give the varsity some hard scrimmage and several times in scheduled games scored on them. At least two or three of these freshmen are expected to make the varsity next year.

As to the basket ball prospects, VanGent thinks they are pretty gloomy. A squad of 25 is practicing every night now, but in it are few men of experience and of the size which he would like to have out. VanGent wants big, rangy players, as they had them at Wisconsin, and for such has sent out a call. As a result several football men are out, including Paul Shepard, who was picked by the Valley coaches as All-Missouri Valley half; Bill Dunckle, the big line plunging back, and Phil Savage, the St. Louis boy who got his "M" after four years' effort. None of them except Shepard has had much experience in basket ball and he has had no college experience.

Basket Star Is Ill

It appears that "Jinx," who worked such havoc with the Tiger regulars last year, may be set for another year of mischief. Palfreyman, elected for this year's captain, has been in the hospital with typhoid fever for some weeks and it is not known whether he will be back at school next semester. Young Drumm, a member of last year's team, has a dislocated elbow which may keep him out of the game for a longer time than the team can afford, and Sach Rowitz, a first year man who made the freshman team last year, has a broken foot. If "Jinx" keeps this up Missouri will finish in basket ball about where it finished last year.

Of last year's regulars who are back and unmaimed are Speelman, also star end on the football team, and Weir. Speelman is a good, heavy, aggressive guard and Weir is a light but fast forward and ranked well up with the other forwards in the Valley last year in the matter of goals made. Hyde, who made the team in 1913, but who was not in school last year, will be back.

Of last year's freshman team all except Sach Rowitz are out for the varsity. They include Muir, Calahan, Williams and Munger. Kemper and Haines, football men, and Simpson, who bids fair to win many points in track for Missouri next year, are also out.

New Style of Play Probable

It is predicted that VanGent will introduce a new style of play somewhat similar to the Yale style. Dr. Meanwell, who coached Wisconsin when VanGent was there, was an advocate of the Yale style, and Wisconsin more than any other Big Nine team used Eastern methods. Eastern teams up to a few years ago were generally credited with being faster than Western, but Coach Noyes of Yale says that this statement is no longer true. VanGent wants to develope a fast team and will probably feature the short pass and the close guarding system.

Pirates Sign 44 Men.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Dec. 5.—The Pittsburg National League baseball club anounced tonight that it has 44 players under contract for the 1915 season. The number is comprised of seven catchers, 15 pitchers, 11 outfielders and 11 infielders and does not include the veteran "Hans" Wagner.

President Barney Dreyfuss and J. H. Dailey, business manager of the local club, will leave tomorrow night to attend the annual meeting of the National League in New York.

McKinley and Yeatman Fives Win First Outs

The interscholastic basket ball season of 1914-15 was inaugurated last night at the Louisiana Hall by two virtual walkaways, the Yeatman five defeating Central in the opener, 31 to 15, while Yeatman trimmed the Soldan quint in the closing battle, 37 to 15. The winning teams had things quite their own way in the games and shortly after the games had started it was only a question as to the magnitude of the scores.

Central opened its contest with a rush and a few moments after play had started forged into the lead when Pink McElwee shot the first basket netted by a "prepster" this year. Central kept up its fast pace and led the North Enders in a large part of the first half. However, the Yeatman teamwork soon reached its own and the mid-city lads were then outclassed. Yeatman scores came thick and fast and at the end of the first half Coach Fuller's lads were leading, 17 to 5.

Central took a slight brace at the opening of the next period and enlivened matters for a while. However, this proved to be only a flash of form and before the final whistle had blown Yeatman had more than doubled the count. It must be said that Yeatman played with a team almost intact from last year, while the greater part of the Central team had never played together before.

The Soldan team was utterly unable to cope with the play of the McKinley team throughout the game. McKinley got off to the lead when Fuerborn shot an easy basket a few minutes after play had started. The South Siders proceeded to roll up a score and in a short time Soldan was left far behind. At no stage of the game was the West End team on the top of the fracas.

Callahan Paid White $1200
For Chance to Oppose Him
Received $242 and a Good Lacing

By Harry S. Sharpe,

Referee for the Future City Athletic Club and the Post-Dispatch's Boxing Authority.

FOR a chance to meet Charlie White of Chicago Frankie Callahan risked defeat and the possibility of having to box the lightweight flash for little or money.

Most any boxer will take on a champion or anyone else, if he is guaranteed enough for it, but Callahan showed his confidence by taking a chance, with the odds decidedly against him.

This is what Callahan did: He agreed to box White for 50 per cent of the gross receipts, out of which he was to guarantee White $1200 or an option of 35 per cent, as the Chicago boxer might elect. It was, therefore, necessary that the gross receipts amount to more than $2400 before Callahan would receive a cent, except $50 paid him by the club for training expense.

In view of the fact that attendance at boxing shows this season has been lighter than heretofore, it was taking some chance. But Callahan believed he had a good chance to defeat White, and he cared more for this than he did for the money he was going to be paid for doing it or taking a beating.

Callahan Pays White.

According to information given out yesterday, the receipts totaled $2885. Callahan's share amounted to $1442, and out of this he paid White $1200. So that Callahan boxed as hard and fast an eight-round bout as he may ever do again for $242, plus $50 allowed him for training expense.

Before he went into the ring Callahan knew the attendance was light, and knew he was about to box a lightweight rated as second to none. He might have backed out of t then, especially when White refused to remove an unreasonable amount of taping from his hands, but Callahan stuck to his bargain. He might even have entered the ring and sprinted, clinched and stalled his way through the bout, but, instead, he gave the best that was in him and battled every inch of the way in an effort to win. To say that Callahan deserves credit, is putting it mildly.

Another thing: It may not have occurred to many that White was unable to accomplish with Callahan what he had done to Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welsh, both of whom were heavier men than Callahan and, presumably, better as they were acknowledged champions when he met them. He knocked Ritchie down several times and put Welsh down for the count in the tenth. Neither Ritchie nor Welsh fought White any harder than Callahan did, but the little New Yorker escaped what they did not.

"White No World Beater."

Instead of praising himself for having been able to stay with White, Callahan yesterday came out with the remarkable statement that he does not consider White an "extraordinarily good fighter—just a good average one."

To refute statements that he was cut and bruised in his bout with White and suffered much punishment, Callahan yesterday morning had pictures taken of himself to be used as evidence wherever he may seek matches that he was not badly hurt.

Despite the fact that Callahan waived his right to demand that White reduce the thickness of the bandages worn by him, White should have been made to remove them. It is true, the Queensberry rules do not provide whether a boxer shall, or shall not, be permitted to wear bandages upon his hands, but for many years it has been customary to permit the wearing of light bandages to brace the bones of the wrist and back of the hand.

This privilege has been so abused that many boxers now consider it their right to wrap heavy taping over the knuckles, and it is done for no other purpose than to give leverage and impact to a punch. The bandages worn by White were so thick that they filled out the gloves and made them a hard substance, so that he practically carried a billet in either hand. This is a dangerous practice and should not be permitted.

Should a boxer be permitted to heavily tape his hands as White did and a serious accident or fatality occur, the fact that he so bound his hands will be construed strictly against him as showing intent to do bodily harm, and all those who assist in it will be guilty as aids and abettors.

Should Be in Articles.

This is a matter that should be given serious attention by our local boxing promoters and, if necessary, there should be inserted a clause in articles of agreement providing for light bandages, subject to approval by the referee.

When it was seen that White's hands were so heavily wrapped with adhesive taping, "Sport" Sullivan, manager for Callahan, asked that the Chicago boxer be made to unwrap his hands and rewrap them, but this was refused. Sullivan had a right to know what might be under them, considering that they were so bulky. It is not the intention of the writer to impute unfair methods to Charlie White or any of his advisers, but "safety first" makes after regrets sometimes unnecessary. The writer has known where a linen bandage dipped in a solution of plaster of paris and then wrapped about the hands has done a lot of damage.

kicker in the East, would be a valuable back to any eleven. He is better suited, I think, to the halfback position than to quarter, but, with Mahan, would be a dangerous man running back kicks. He is a very shifty runner, as he proved both against Michigan and Pennsylvania, and is one of the best men playing the game in picking his way down the side lines.

Many Other Good Ones.

AINSWORTH of Yale has proved again this year, that he is one of the brainiest backs in the game. He is a good runner, especially when going wide, and also dependable receiver of the forward and the lateral pass.

Cahall of Lehigh is an all-around back whose kicking can be depended upon as well as his running. He is a drop-kicker and a first-class punter and one of the strongest runners, ball in hand, in the East. Whitney of Dartmouth is one of the hardest men to stop the green has ever had. He, too, is a kicker, but his chief value lies in his quick dashes off tackle and guard.

Hodgson of the Army is one of the season's best all-around backs, as his work, not forgetting his kicking in the Army-Navy game, showed us. Legore, the kingpin of Yale's passing game, both forward and Rugby, did some of the prettiest catching of kicks seen on a field this year, and was, in addition, a hard plunging back.

Six of the 10 backs chosen are kickers. Three of them can be called upon for the forward pass. There are not fewer than three ends and five backs who are expert in receiving the forward pass. I think no form of attack or deefnse has been overlooked.

It has been, indeed, a rich season for backs. Frazer of Colby could be called upon in an emergency, and there are fully a dozen others who would fit in very neatly. The only difficulty lies in keeping the team down to the size of a squad instead of that of a regiment.

GEN. VILLA HALTS MEET AT JUAREZ, DISPATCH HINTS

Mexican Leader Said to Be Partner of Former St. Louisan in Pool Room.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—An unconfirmed rumor reached here last night that there had been no racing at the Juarez tracks on Mexican soil for several days, because Gen. Pancho Villa had put his foot down hard. According to the story circulated among sporting men, Villa has become interested in a big pool room run within a stone's throw of the race track at Juarez by a man named Roy Offutt, formerly of St. Louis.

Offutt began operations, it is said, when the Juarez track opened for a meeting of 100 days on Nov. 26. In his pool room he accepted bets on the Juarez races and also on those run at Charleston, S. C. As a result the pool room, so the story goes, practically killed the patronage at the track, because no admission fee was charged to enter Offutt's betting pavilion.

Col. Winn, it is said, protested to the Juarez authorities against the existence of the pool room and they communicated with Gen. Villa. Winn, meanwhile, decided to close the track until Villa could be heard from. Offutt, however, telegraphed Villa that the pool room was a gold mine, whereupon Villa refused to interfere.

Race Track a Loser?

Last winter Villa visited the Juarez track and made many big bets. Strange to say, he played the winning horses and made no attempt to stop the proceedings at the track. Offutt, the gossips say, became Villas closest friend at the time and subsequently he unfolded the pool-room scheme, in which the Mexican war lord was declared a partner.

If the pool room remains in business all winter it is predicted that the racetrack, providing Col. Winn decides to resume racing, will be conducted at a heavy loss. Gen. Villa evidently knows a good thing when he sees it.

Villa says there is no difference between a pool room and the racetrack when it comes to the betting question.

Auburn Defeats Carlisle 7—0.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 5.—In a bitterly fought game here today, the Auburn football team defeated the Carlisle Indian School team 7 to 0. There was little advantage to either side in the first three periods. In the final period after advancing well down the field by line plunges, Auburn worked a double pass and carried the ball to the 6-yard line. On the next play it was sent through the Indians' line for a touchdown and a goal was kicked. Carlisle braced and prevented further scoring.

MADE WORLD'S RECORDS

On the Corona (Cal.) track in the race of Thanksgiving day, Barney Oldfield drove a Maxwell car over 300 miles at an average speed of over 80 miles an hour without a stop. Thus the world's nonstop speed record was broken, and another victory was placed to the credit of Firestone tires.

Four hours of incessant grinding over a high-crowned track at burning speed is enough to virtually burn up the tires. In fact, out of 20 entrants, Oldfield was the only driver who was not compelled to stop for tire changes.

The official time for the race now stands: Pullen, in a Mercer, first, with a time of 3 hours, 26 minutes and 30 seconds; Oldfield, driving a Maxwell, 3 hours, 29 minutes and 58 seconds; O'Donnell, in a Deusenberg, 3 hours, 31 minutes and 29 seconds; De Palma, in the same Mercedes that created such a sensation in the Grand Prix race in France this year, 3 hours, 31 minutes and 5[illegible] seconds.

SEE BIG DEMAND FOR MOTOR CARS COMING SPRING

Distributors and Dealers With "Prospects" in Hand Are Placing Orders Heavily.

Automobile manufacturers and dealers are preparing for a demand next spring that will fully sustain the pace set by the spring selling seasons of recent years.

Sales managers and distributors of the leading cars unanimously assert that this fall's business was not only satisfactory, but a distinct surprise to the pessimists.

Requests of distributors and dealers for ample allotments wherewith to meet the rush of spring, 1915, already coming in reveal a confidence in the field that can only be based on definite prospects.

Following the usual experience of the trade, the first fine days of next spring will remind these prospects by the thousands that they want their cars—and dealers will be expected to run the cars up to the front doors of purchasers the day they are asked for.

Many will get their cars promptly, others will be disappointed. Few realize the enormous business involved in preparation to meet the spring demand. The cars have to be ready at the dealers' points of delivery.

Distributors and dealers all over the country are even now placing their orders for shipments from carloads to trainloads on a monthly schedule, right through the winter. The distributors and dealers have to pay for these cars at the time of delivery. Except with factory branches practically no consignment business is done. The cars are stored at the points of delivery, awaiting the spring purchasers.

It is a distinct mark of the substantial foundation and healthy tone of the automobile business that distributors and dealers so generally obtain the financial support necessary to obtain cars months in advance of the demand. Commodore William Livingstone, president of the Dime Savings Bank of Detroit, said to the American Bankers' Association at Richmond, Va.:

"The disposition in early years to look askance at the automobile manufacturer and dealer has passed, and with further knowledge of the business, credits commensurate with sound banking methods have been extended to the mutual benefit of all. No longer do we hear talk that the automobile business will go the same way as the bicycle business, it being generally agreed that the making and marketing of motor cars is among our greatest industries—a situation to be credited to a large degree to the care and conservatism of bankers who have been active in caring for the automobile dealers among their patrons."

MADE RECORD RUN ON TRIP TO HANNIBAL

L. E. Newell and H. G. Weaver of the Newell Motor Car Co., distributors for the Haynes in this territory, have just returned from a tour through Northern Missouri where they have been creating a great deal of interest in the new Haynes Light Six.

They claim to have established an economy record between St. Louis and Hannibal, Mo., having traveled this distance of 135 miles on six gallons of gasoline and 2½ pints of oil.

"We set out to make a record run," said Newell. "We left St. Louis at 6:30 last Tuesday morning and reached Hannibal as the clock struck 11:30 a. m.

"We visited a number of cities in our territory during the past week and succeeded in establishing agencies in several counties. Everyone was anxious to see the car throttle down to one mile an hour on high gear and we demonstrated this remarkable performance dozens of times every day.

"The rugged country alongside the river afforded us ample opportunity to demonstrate the hill climbing ability of our car and its performance proved a sensation."

Hunt, William Schmidt, John E. Bishop and Fred A. Lyons five each and A. N. Engle of Kirkwood 10. The capital stock is $10,000.

Arbogast was the manager of the Cole Motor Co. of Missouri which recently went out of business. The new company, which is now seeking a new location, will, as suggested by its name, handle the Cole car in St. Louis and territory.

HUPP FACTORY MEN TALK TO LOCAL DEALERS

More than 100 dealers in the Hupmobile attended a convention in St. Louis, called by George Weber of the Weber Implement & Automobile Co., Thursday and Friday. They came from all parts of the St. Louis territory in which they handle the Hupmobile under the Weber company. Several important men from the Hupmobile factory attended the convention and talked to the dealers about the future of the automobile business and that of the Hupmobile in particular. Among them were F. A. Harris, F. J. Mooney, sales manager; S. H. Humphrey, manufacturing manager; C. E. Buck, advertising manager; C. J. Fox, manager service department; W. C. Howard, assistant sales manager; A. H. Allen of the sales department, and W. E. Alford of the mechanical department.

After the talks Thursday morning a luncheon was served at the Marquette Hotel. The afternoon was given over to similar talks on service and selling and at night an elaborate dinner was tendered to the dealers and factory men by the Weber company, with George Weber, its president, as toast master. There were brief talks by Messrs. Mooney, Buck, Allen, F. E. Schneidewind of Belleville, Cyril Robinson, John Bledsoe, Koenig and Robert E. Lee. Many of the dealers remained over Friday to close up their contracts for the coming season.

TESTED THE NEW BUICK

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 5.—A new model Buick six, in a series of the most exhaustive tests ever held on the Indianapolis motor speedway here today, under the auspices of the A. A. A., proved the absolute superiority of the Stewart vacuum gasoline system over the pressure-feed system. Rigid tests, conducted under severe weather conditions of a freezing rain, were held both on the Speedway and rough, muddy highways.

The official report of Technical Engineer F. E. Edwards of the A. A. A. shows that the car, when equipped with the Stewart vacuum gasoline system, showed an increased mileage per gallon of gasoline of 12½ per cent over tests with the same car when equipped with the pressure system. The new Buick was sent through mud hub deep at a speed of 22 miles an hour, and on the Indianapolis Speedway at 30 miles an hour. In every test the vacuum system proved conclusively its great economy because of uniform flow of gasoline and the condition in which it is delivered to the carburetor.

TO COVER TERRITORY ON ROAD PROPAGANDA

A movement to spread the gospel of good roads through the Southwest has been launched by the Peerless Motor Car Co. of St. Louis, through its representative, S. M. Williams.

The campaign is laid out along lines showing the social and economic results of good roads in rural communities, and it is to be carried into Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico.

Williams worked out elaborate plans from material which he has himself gathered and data furnished him by the National Highways Association and automobile clubs and dealers throughout this country. In connection with this work he is also propogating the movement of "See America first, via automobile," and has a very interesting collection of pictures.

From a great mass of facts and figures he has prepared a stereopticon lecture which he will deliver. Among the slides shown are a number showing roads before and after being improved, and they are not limited to any one section, but embrace conditions from coast to coast.

In his lecture he dwells on the increased values of farm lands, due to road improvements, and shows that good roads mean increased business, bad roads huge losses, good roads increased profits to farmers, because they are able at all seasons to take advantage of the best market prices, not being hampered by impassible roads.

In one picture he shows where two counties join, one having improved roads, the other none, and cites an instance where cotton advanced $1 per bale. One farmer living on good road hauled four bales and made a profit, and the farmer on the bad road only hauled one bale and lost the increase in price. In another he shows that good roads mean education and refinement, and better schools, while bad roads stand for illiteracy.

The lectures started in St. Louis, where he delivered one at the salesrooms of the Peerless Motor Car Co., last Tuesday.

The lecture is void of any advertising and only in one or two instances is the automobile mentioned, and then only where two trucks are shown in a slide.

THE NEW KISSELKAR LINE

The Kissel Motor Car Co. has scheduled for 1915 the largest output of KisselKars in its history. Four pleasure car models will be built, one of which has not yet been announced. The commercial line will consist of six chassis sizes, 1500 pounds, 1, 1½, 2½, 3½ and 6 tons. The full line of pleasure cars, including the car yet unannounced, will be exhibited at the New York and Chicago automobile shows in January. The successful detachable sedan top, which has particularly distinguished the Kissel line this fall, will be a feature at the show. The car is handled in St. Louis by the Colonial Motor Car Co.

OUTLINED ESSAY CONTEST

At a little dinner at the American Hotel, Friday at noon, G. L. Willman, advertising manager of the Studebaker Corporation, and a number of St. Louisans interested in the Studebaker, were the guests of Carl J. Simon, manager of the St. Louis Studebaker branch house. Willman talked at some length to the diners on Studebaker policies, Studebaker output and Studebaker cars. He also outlined the two essay contests in which Studebaker salesmen can win $100 prize money by writing the best story on how a Studebaker car was sold. Among those at the dinner were Carl J. Simon, F. C. Kenney, Edward Weber, A. W. Farrell, Alanzon B. Jones, H. L. Stiff, George G. Behrens, Newton E. Dale, Sam C. Igou, T. S. Duby and R. E. Dillard.

The Balanced Four that lightens Winter Upkeep

Let's start by saying you want a car but thought you might get one along in May. What's the use of waiting 'til then and missing the best of the whole year's driving?

There's comfort and there's convenience in having a car at just this time of the year. But there's a world of pleasure, too, in getting out-o'-doors just now in the bracing winds that set your ears a-tingle and your blood leaping.

And this Studebaker FOUR is just the car for winter. For with over-measure of power that makes it careless of the roads and the weather, it gives you, with its close-fitting top and stowaway curtains all the protection and all the comforts of a much heavier, closed car.

But the BIG thing is that the Studebaker engineers in simplifying its design have made it STRONGER and so much better balanced and aligned that the jars and jouncings of winter roads find no reflection in increased upkeep costs.

It's the balanced FOUR that lightens expense—the FOUR you want for winter as well as the rest of the year. Will you come in and see it—see how much you CAN get in this FOUR at $985

Driving a Studebaker 30, S. M. Washburn of El Reno, Ok., accompanied by his wife and two little girls, came into St. Louis Thursday, en route to Lakeville, N. C. Washburn stopped at the repair shop of W. L. Patterson, 3424 Lindell avenue, for two days to have some adjustments made. The trip to St. Louis was made from El Reno via Enid, Wichita, Emporia, Kansas City, Booneville, Columbia and St. Charles. From St. Louis the drive will be via Terre Haute, Indianapolis, Columbus, O.; Louisville, Ky., and from there by the Goodrich route book to destination. Washburn said he had found the roads in excellent condition.

TO BUILD MOTOR BOATS IN ST. LOUIS PLANT

Motor boating in and around St. Louis is to be given a big impetus by the establishment here in the early spring of a big boat-building plant by the St. Louis Yacht and Boat-Building Co. of which Judson H. Boughton is the head. This company has purchased the plant at Alton of the Sparks Boat and Engine Co., which has been turning out power boats for a number of years. This plant can build a boat up to 100 feet in length, but the new plant will be equipped to build power boats up to 250 feet long.

Some time ago Bougton sent out 1550 letters to St. Louisans at random asking of their interest in motor boating. Answers to the number of 800 were received and this decided him and his associates to undertake to build boats here. They already have under contract a gasoline propelled tug which they say will work much more economically than a steam tug, with more power and capacity for freight and passengers. This goes to the Mississippi River Power Co. at Keokuk, the builders of the Keokuk dam.

They have also under contract now four power boats of varying sizes and have recently delivered four, all of which carried unusual features and conveniences.

A map has been issued by the company indicating that St. Louis is a natural water center, from which owners of power boats can travel in many directions and even down the Mississippi and around the Atlantic and through the big lakes, back to St. Louis. This trip has been made a number of times.

The company has connections with the best and biggest builders of marine engines and can equip any kind or style of power boat built in its own yards, with a motor best suited to the work intended.

NOTES OF MOTOR BOATS

The St. Louis Yacht and Boat Co. report the sale of the 45-foot raised-deck cruiser "Sunshine" to N. P. Dazey, president of the Dazey Churn Co., St. Louis, who will sail from St. Louis on Saturday with his family for a cruise to New Orleans and Florida.

The "Sunshine" is a sister ship of the "Betsy," launched from the company's works at Alton in October and owned by Harry G. Samson, of Pittsburg, who with his family has just made the same cruise, a distance of 3000 miles, and of the "Elsa II," launched April of last year, which has cruised 9000 miles on the rivers and great lakes, including two round trips to Northern Lake Michigan. Fourteen of these models which are designed both for deep sea and river cruising, have been built by the St. Louis Yacht and Boat Co., and two of these boats have made the complete circuit down the Mississippi, through the Gulf, up the Atlantic Seaboard, through the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes and back to St. Louis via the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers.

These cruisers accommodate a cruising party of eight in three separate but connecting cabins and are equipped with electric lights, running hot and cold water and all conveniences. The galley is equipped with larders for the storage of provisions, a large refrigerator, linen and silver lockers, cooking range and sink with running hot and cold water. The dining table is used either in the main cabin or on the after deck which is protected by an awning and seats eight people. The power plant is a four-cycle, four-cylinder marine engine giving the boat a cruising speed of 10 to 12½ miles an hour at an operating cost of less than five cents per mile.

A heavy duty Sterling engine is being installed in the 40-foot service boat being built at the Alton works for the Mississippi River Power Co. and the launching of this boat, which is a new type of commercial craft for the Mississippi River, has been set for Dec. 8, following which the boat will be brought to St. Louis for a trial run and for inspection, after which it will proceed to Keokuk.

During the past five years the speed of racing boats has been practically doubled through changes in hull design and through the development of special engines for this service. The two-cycle engine was first tried because of its somewhat lesser weight per horse-power, but this type of machine has given way to the more consistent and reliable marine motor which differs materially in design and construction from both the two-cycle marine engine and the four-cycle automobile motor, which latter has proven a failure for the propulsion of boats of all classes. The motor boat is usually operated continuously at its maximum speed, whereas the motor car capable of 60 miles an hour seldom averages a speed of more than one-third of this figure and in this and other respects the marine motor is called upon for much more severe service, requiring an entirely different design.

Trips are being made up and down the river each day from the St. Louis Yacht Club at the foot of North Market street by sportsmen in search of ducks, which are now plentiful in the rivers about St. Louis. Many of the hunters report limit bags secured within an hour's run of the club headquarters.

We have taken our season's immense accumulation of slightly used and shop-worn pianos and player-pianos and have "bunched" them with our factory samples in three amazing collections. Former prices and original values have been completely lost sight of. We only know that we've got to clear our floors of all these remarkably high-grade pianos—and our prices tell how we mean to do it! ANY PIANO OR PLAYER YOU SELECT MUST PROVE THOROUGHLY SATISFACTORY AFTER A MONTH'S USE IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU HAVE TO PAY A SINGLE CENT!

CITIZENS CONTROL CHRISTMAS FETE OF POST-DISPATCH

BIG DINNER FOR ALL

St. Louisans Comment on Joy That Is Brought to Children by Coliseum Festival.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL FUND.

List No. 187 (seven contributors)	1 50

A COMMITTEE of well-known citizens governs the Post-Dispatch Christmas Festival, which gives to the poor that gift of joy without which their poverty would be deeper. The committee controls the purchase of supplies for the baskets that are to be sent to the homes of needy families, reported to it by all the charitable associations in St. Louis; it controls the purchase of gifts for the children that are to be distributed in the Coliseum after the Pantomime of Christmas given by the Pageant organization on Christmas day.

There will be a Christmas Day dinner in every home in St. Louis because the Christmas Festival Association, will send baskets of food to all who would otherwise lack; in the afternoon the children will be gathered in the Coliseum to receive their gifts from an immense tree.

Children Will Dance.

The pantomime was written by William Le Baume, with music by Dr. Arthur Proetz. Among the actors will be children who were taught dances at the municipal playgrounds. There will be music by Seymour's band and lots of fun.

You can become a member of the Christmas Festival Association by sending a contribution to the Post-Dispatch. That is how the bills are paid—and there are heavy bills to pay. Every year the readers of this paper contribute what they can afford to the Festival, knowing that only through this means can the poor children, their burdened fathers and mothers, enjoy the blessing of the great Day.

Give something and make your own Christmas sweeter for the knowledge that you have seen to it that your responsibility for the poor children's Christmas has been discharged.

Who will give if you do not? You cannot be sure of anyone but yourself. You can be sure that there are children in St. Louis whose parents are unable to give them any but the meanest food and are unable to give them any toy or add any of the season's brightness to their dull lives.

Opinions by Citizens.

Prominent citizens of St. Louis who have seen the Festival at the Coliseum tell in the following sentences how it impressed them. Some were intimately connected with the work and some were only spectators; but all agree in testimony to its great beauty and value to the community.

A. H. Frederick, who was chairman of the 1913 Festival, said about it: "Isn't this great? The crowd is the largest I have ever seen at a Post-Dispatch Festival."

Louis Nolte: This is the best Festival ever. Anyone who has a heart, that could see that crowd of people in line for baskets and not feel good for having the satisfaction of aiding them would not be human.

R. S. Hawes, chairman of the Finance and Audit Committee: The Post-Dispatch Christmas Festival is the greatest thing of its kind in America. It not only carries charity, but also a splendid Christmas spirit.

The late Capt. Robert McCulloch, in 1913, said: "The Christmas Festival is extremely commendable because it reaches the people who have no other means of being made happy on Christmas day." Capt. McCulloch was chairman of the Transportation Committee.

"Immense Amount of Good."

Miss Charlotte Rumbold: I know many of these children and can realize better the immense amount of good accomplished by this entertainment.

Henry Bube: The entertainment this year is better than ever.

Dinks L. Parish: The happy faces of these children speak more eloquently than words of the success of the entertainment.

H. H. Zucker: This is truly a great sight to see all these little ones entertained so thoroughly.

Otto Karbe: I think the festivals are getting better each year. This is the ninth consecutive year that I have taken an active part and I don't think I ever saw a larger or happier crowd at a festival heretofore.

W. H. Oberbeck: The entertainment following a hearty meal which is thoroughly enjoyed at home, serves to cultivate a taste for the better things of life, music and artistic dances, which I think are the soul features.

Sight Unrivaled in World.

Edward F. Goltra: I think this sight is unrivaled in the world, and the fact that it is the Post-Dispatch, a St. Louis newspaper, that has arranged the staging of this colossal tableau of "peace on earth, good will to men" serves to give the city a reputation that it may well be proud of.

John C. D. Jackson: The affair typifies what public gift-giving at Christmas time should come to. It enters the realm of real Christgiving.

Ralph Coale: If old Scrooge had ever had a peep of the unrestrained good cheer and genuine happiness that was present in the Coliseum as the result of the Yuletide spirit flooding a community, it is certain he would have soon sensed the miserableness of his own viewpoint.

They All Came Smiling.

Police Captain Martin O'Brien: They all came smiling, and they all left smiling. The anticipation had been great and the realization its equal.

Valle Reyburn: To have brought such joy and happiness to the thousands present at this festival must have more than repaid the committee for its hardships and labors.

Chief of Police Young: Such work as this for the little fellows means less work for the Police Department when they grow up.

Chief of Detectives Allender: To appreciate what the Festival means to these, one needs to have felt the gnaw of hunger and to have tasted the bitter and gall of life.

Charles A. Forse: I have been assisting at the Christmas Festival for seven or eight years, and it gets better every year.

F. E. A. Curley: To come here would convert anybody that needs conversion to the good that can be done by providing Christmas cheer for the children of the poor.

Is such testimony convincing? Does it not compel the opening of your purse that the Fund may be made adequate to give every poor family and every child a share in the Day's festivity?

One Other Man and Two Women Under Indictment in Maine in Same Case.

HOULTON, Me., Dec. 5.—Lionel E Dudley, a young physician of Presque Isle, was put on trial in the Supreme Court today charged with the murder of Mildred Sullivan, 17 years old, of Houlton. Dr. Dudley is also charged with performing an illegal operation.

Miss Sullivan's body was discovered in a shallow grave in the woods two months after her disappearance on Sept. 4, the date of the alleged murder.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into a pint of cough syrup. The cough will vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a hard cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

BOOKMAKERS' RING HAD CENTRAL WIRE BUREAU IN COUNTY

"A NETWORK OF AGENTS"

Report Does Not Blame Police, but Suggests More and Sudden Raids.

Methods by which "12 or 15 principal bookmakers" conduct betting on horse races "throughout the city to a surprising extent" were disclosed yesterday in a report of the October grand jury, which returned 27 indictments against 15 men, on charges of bookmaking, feloniously becoming custodians of bets and occupying rooms for the purpose of making wagers.

That the bookmakers possess a central bureau of information, with long-distance telephone wires and telephone connections with the main gambling places, was asserted by attaches of the Circuit Attorney's office. This bureau, they said, is in a cottage in St. Louis County, just across the city boundary, in the vicinity of Delmar Garden. Its manager was declared to be Albert E. Morelock, who is jointly named in 21 indictments with 10 other men.

It was alleged by detectives who worked on the cases that Morelock, by means of telephone wires to Terre Haute and Indianapolis, obtained information as to the various races being run, the horses entered and the odds upon them, and that he relayed these facts by telephone to his various associates in St. Louis.

The grand jury, in its report, stated the bookmakers maintain places where persons may go and lay wagers on horse races. Bets may also be made by telephone, and the bookmakers have "a network of agents" all over the city commissioned to accept bets on their behalf.

Indicted Several Times.

Morelock, on the charge of feloniously becoming custodian of a bet, was jointly indicted twice with Conrad P. Heib, twice with William Kiely, twice with "Chick" Heib, once with Harry Brocksmith, once each with Thomas Kearney, Joseph P. Parks, Frank Cummings and James Cummings, and twice with Charles R. Woods. Morelock was jointly accused with Joseph J. Foster in six indictments charging bookmaking; and on the same charge was indicted once each with Kearney and Brocksmith.

Louis Rosenthal and Andrew Pensa were charged with illegally taking charge of wagers; a second indictment against Kearney charged bookmaking, and another indictment against Rosenthal accused him of occupying quarters for the purpose of making bets.

All of these men, except Morelock, were named in indictments voted by the June grand jury charging that they operated handbooks. They were reindicted so as, in most cases, to include Morelock's name, and in others to make the charge more specific.

In addition, the grand jury returned new indictments against Henry ("Kid") Becker, John Lang and Fred Hall, all of whom are charged technically with becoming custodians of wagers. Becker is declared by Circuit Attorney Harvey to be the head and front of the handbook evil in St. Louis, the headquarters of which, according to Harvey, was unearthed in a raid upon Becker's place Friday afternoon on the fourth floor of an old and unused building at 211 Chestnut street.

Hard to Get Evidence.

The grand jury admitted it was difficult for the police to obtain evidence against such places, and suggested the use of persons as detectives who are unknown to the handbook men.

"We would suggest, however," the report continues, "and recommend as a most efficient method of crushing out this evil, that frequent and sudden raids be made by the police upon the rooms where it is known or reasonably believed that a gambling business is being conducted.

"This unlawful business, which our laws denounce as a felony, is carried on throughout the city to a surprising extent, and the police should be vigilant and active in exterminating it."

Becker, Lang and Hall were released on bond, after being arrested in raids Friday afternoon. The other 12 men are still answerable to bail given in the June indictments, which have not been nolle prosequied.

Private Detectives Used.

The crusade against the handbook men was conducted by the Circuit Attorney alone, with private detectives and those detached from the city detective bureau for exclusive service in his department. The surprise of the police and detective chiefs was complete when Harvey's men returned Friday with 37 prisoners, taken in raids on Becker's place, and 101 North Eighth street, and at 1730 Olive street, where 23 men were arrested and 15 others escaped through a back window. Most of the prisoners were rushed to the grand jury room and gave evidence on which some of the indictments were voted. They were then released.

Harvey took the situation into his own hands after the grand jury had learned that handbooks were being operated on an extensive scale in the city without serious interference from the police or the "gambling squad" of detectives.

Valhalla's Mausoleum for Community Purposes A Step Forward in Civilization

This Sanitary Way of Caring for the Dead is Now Being Established in Nearly All the Cities and Towns of This Country and Canada

The Stamp of Approval

The stamp of approval of the American people has long since been placed on Mausoleum burial by the tributes of respect shown some of our great men such as Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, McKinley and others, in the erection of mausoleums in honor of their memory. To render possible an opportunity to show the greatest respect to their departed, Valhalla Mausoleum, pictured above, will be erected by those desirous of using this method of caring for the dead.

Construction

This magnificent Mausoleum will be constructed entirely of granite, bronze, marble, steel, concrete and glass, making the structure as nearly indestructible as is possible for modern engineers and architects to design.

The interior design will be in all respects a fitting complement to its magnificent exterior. Art glass will be used in all windows, thus giving the interior a soft light of cheerful appearance.

Chapel

In the center of the building will be a beautiful, spacious Chapel furnished throughout in white marble and bronze, in which all services attendant upon burial may be held amid the most comfortable surroundings. The remains can then be deposited in one of the snow-white sanitary tombs, hermetically sealed, proof against decay and the ravages of time.

Maintenance

The building will be perpetually cared for by the endowment fund of the Valhalla Cemetery Association, which will amount to a half million dollars.

Advantages

Mausoleum entombment has heretofore been obtainable only by the ultra wealthy. Mausoleum entombment, as will be provided by this building for community purposes, will be within the reach of all and at no greater expense than earth burial and will be perpetually cared for by endowment.

Space Must Be Subscribed Before Construction Begins

The number of tombs in the building will be strictly limited to those who make reservations in advance of its construction, who only will be able to secure for themselves and families the advantages it offers.

A Monument to Man's Finer Sensibilities

This is an age of Progress—what was an impossibility yesterday is today a mere matter of fact. We all must be earnest enough, serious enough and honest enough with ourselves to admit that some day, somewhere, we must find a resting place. It is for you to decide today whether you will have the best there is to be had—a clean, dry white room in this marble palace, or leave it to chance. This is one of the few grand, good things we can only have when needed most by providing for it when needed least, as the Mausoleum is to be erected only for those who subscribe for space prior to its erection.

The Number of Reservations Suggests Prompt Action

The plans of this Mausoleum contemplate only one thousand tombs which offer space for a single casket each. Assuming that the average family reservation will be for three tombs, the available space will be taken by 335 subscribers, after which it will no longer be possible to obtain space.

Cost of Space Very Moderate

The cost of space in this beautiful building is within the reach of all and the advantages so many and so important that even the private mausoleum, costing thousands of dollars, is less desirable in comparison.

Single tombs may be had at $250 each. Payments for same are made only as the building progresses; no money is paid at the time of making reservations.

Private Sections or Rooms

De Luxe sections of four tombs each, or private rooms with from four to ten tombs, may be had by families who desire exclusiveness. These private rooms will be beautifully finished with heavy bronze doors opening off the magnificent corridors. They will afford privacy to far greater advantage than is provided at many times the cost in private mausoleums.

Provision for Those Opposed to Earth Burial

Construction of this magnificent edifice will be commenced in the early spring and will be pushed to completion as rapidly as careful construction will permit. Anyone reserving space now, however, will be protected against any chance of earth burial, for in case of death before completion of the mausoleum their remains will be cared for, without cost, in the magnificent receiving vaults at Valhalla Cemetery.

Upon request we will gladly send you a booklet containing full particulars of the Valhalla Mausoleum or will have a representative call by appointment at any time and explain the sanitary arrangements and construction and how reservations can be made.

Ten Reasons Why You Should Reserve Compartments in Valhalla's Beautiful Mausoleum

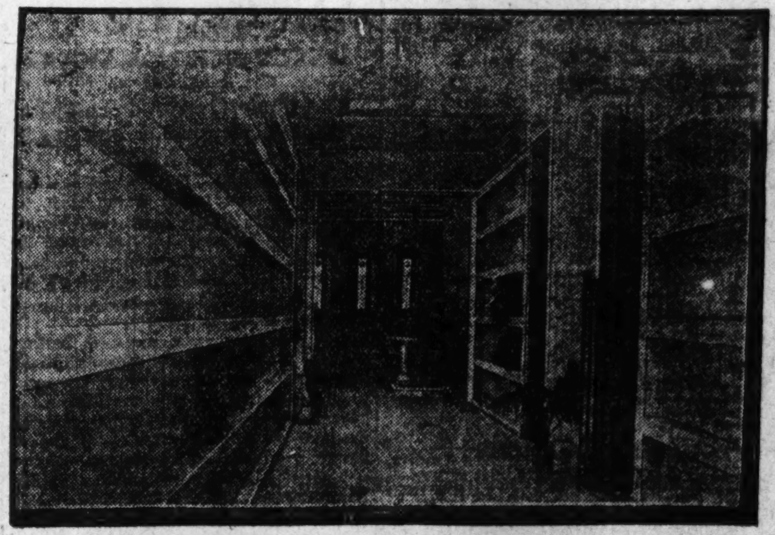
2—Because the Mausoleum is a beautiful resting place for your loved ones and a sane, practical and sanitary method of caring for the dead.

3—Because those who are opposed to earth burial or cremation can provide for themselves a last resting place, than which no King or Potentate has better, at no greater cost than burying in the ground.

4—Because, being endowed in perpetuity, this place, so sacred to you, will not be desecrated by alien hands and you have the satisfaction of knowing that your departed ones remain just as you last saw them.



5—Because it is the place where fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, husbands and wives can lie side by side, not an arm's length apart, through that long night of sleep, each in a separate dry, clean, sanitary tomb where neither water nor damp nor mold can penetrate.

6—Because the perpetual care will be guaranteed by the endowment fund of the Valhalla Cemetery Association, which will amount to a half million dollars. Hence you have no future expense for maintenance.

7—In making your reservations now you not only provide a befitting place of interment but become a pioneer in a movement that has for its end the advance of civilization. All the prestige redounding to the far-sighted who realize the constant progression necessary for the world's welfare will be yours.

8—Because this building will be erected solely for those reserving space in it before the construction begins. They alone will enjoy the advantages of this magnificent Mausoleum.

9—Change in one's financial condition is always to be reckoned with. If you have the means now to secure a final resting place of beauty and dignity, you should not wait until the fluctuations of fortune may put it beyond your grasp. There is no more important investment to be determined in life than where you and those dependent upon you will be finally interred. You should act now because you can never tell what the morrow may bring.

10—Because if you make preparations in advance your mind will not be troubled with the serious burdens and responsibilities that will rest so heavily upon you if you delay it until death makes it necessary that you act at once. You will be able to make your arrangements while your mind is normal and free to act. By attending to this inevitable need now, you will not leave the matter to be hurriedly arranged by your wife and family in the hour of their greatest mental distress, when you are called away.

You Owe Your Face a Good, Clear Skin

And Stuart's Calcium Wafers in a Very Short Time Will Clear Up Your Complexion Naturally.

Just in a few days one may clear the skin of all manner of blemishes such as pimples, blotches, liver spots, etc., if one will use Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

Don't use pasty lotions and creams to fill up the pores when they are working constantly with the blood to throw off the impurities of your system.

"Before I rid my face of pimples I was not thought to be pretty. But all the change I made was to clean my blood and skin."

Many a face is made with beautiful contour and artistically lined, but when the skin is discolored one cannot see the beauty of the face lines. One notices only the skin blemishes.

It's because pimples and eruptions come from the inside—from impure blood—and you can't cure them by rubbing stuff on the outside of the face. Purify the blood and the blemishes will disappear.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers will often clear the complexion in a few days' time. That's the wonderful part of it—they act right off—in a hurry. That's because they're made of just the ingredients needed to drive all poisons and impurities from the blood. That's why doctors prescribe them so constantly.

You will speedily enjoy a beautiful complexion if you use these wonderful little Wafers. Your face will become clear and pure as a rose. Nobody likes to have pimply-faced people around. With Stuart's Calcium Wafers you don't have to wait for months before getting results. Even boils have been cured in a few days' time with these remarkably effective blood cleansers. Your whole system will feel better in a marvelously short time and my, what a difference in your looks!

You can get Stuart's Calcium Wafers of any druggist at 50 cents a box. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

POLITICIANS GAVE TOO MANY JOBS; 13 ARE INDICTED

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 5.—Seven of the 13 members and employes of the Indiana Legislature of 1913 indicted last night by the Marion County grand jury were released on their own recognizance when they appeared in Criminal Court today.

The indictments charge the officials signed warrants to pay for employes in excess of the amounts fixed by law and for more employes than provided for in the statutes.

The actual amount involved in the 34 indictments against the 13 men is about $1500. The charge in each case is that the persons indicted drew warrants for sums ranging from $6 to $75 for employes in excess of the number allowed by law.

Graft is not charged in the indictments. It is a case of the officials of the Legislature giving out more jobs than is permitted by the statutes. The same thing has been done for years, it is said, by Republicans and Democrats alike. The defense probably will be made that the act of 1885 limiting the number of employes of the Legislature is unconstitutional.

Kentucky State Official Indicted for Forgery.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 5.—Thomas S. Byars, State Motor Commissioner, was indicted on 10 counts late today on charges of appropriating money belonging to the State to his own use and of forgery, the misdeeds complained of, it is alleged, occurred in his department of the State government within the last two years.

Byars' chief, C. F. Crecelius, Secretary of State, was indicted for malfeasance in office two months ago, but the indictments afterwards were dismissed.

MOOSE PARTY IN OREGON LOSES LEGAL IDENTITY

Progressives Did Not Cast Required Five Per Cent of Vote Last Month.

SALEM, Ore., Dec. 5.—The Progressive party has lost its legal identity in Oregon. The law requires that a party must cast five per cent of the vote given to congressional candidates in order to retain its identity.

The one Progressive congressional candidate in Oregon received 8521 votes, whereas 11,819 votes were necessary. To get on the ballot again the party will have to do so by petition or convention.

SILVA TO SUCCEED GUTIERREZ, VILLA MEXICO PROGRAM

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 5.—"We shall establish peace in Mexico" was the tense declaration of Gen. Villa this afternoon to the Post-Dispatch correspondent here. "That will be the first and most important thing. I shall accomplish it by methods that will prove our good faith and be satisfactory to the people."

Either tonight or on Sunday Provisional President Gutierrez will be installed with his Cabinet in place of the temporary government set up by Villa and Zapata a few days ago.

According to plans now agreed upon, Gutierrez will give way as soon as practical, to a new provisional Government, headed by Dr. Manuel Silva, formerly Maderist Governor of the State of Michoacan.

It is known to be the desire of Silva that Gen. Villa shall be his War Minister, but it is a question whether Villa will accept. His personal preference is to remain a soldier in the field.

Villa's triumphal entry into the capital probably will take place tomorrow. His camp at Tacuba was visited today by thousands of sightseers. Villa could be seen through the windows of his private car, clad in a khaki uniform, partly covered by a big brown sweater.

It is apparent that Villa absolutely dominates the formation of the new Government. Even Gutierrez pields to him unquestioningly.

One Revolution Said Already to Have Begun.

EL PASO, Tex., Dec. 5.—A new revolutionary movement has been started in Mexico, according to copies of a proclamation received here today and signed by Jose Inez Salazar and Emilio P. Campa, two former Federal Generals. They were reported to be at the head of troops in Central Chihuahua, and about to attack Casas Grandes, a strategical point southwest of Juarez and west of Chihuahua City.

Gov. Hunt Demands Protection for Citizens on Border.

NACO, Ariz., Dec. 5.—F. M. Abrams refused today to answer a summons to testify in a land office hearing on account of the danger of being struck by bullets fired by snipers in the trenches of the Mexican combatants across the line. Special Agent Gibs of the land office was compelled therefore to adjourn the hearing to Abrams' hotel.

A message from Gov. Hunt stated that he had wired to the State Department at Washington today demanding more protection for the citizens of Naco and other border points. He acted on a request sent to him by Naco residents.

EMMA GOLDMAN IN SPEECH DEFENDS LIQUOR

Anarchist Says Prohibition Causes Immorality and Its Advocates Mad.

Emma Goldman, in a speech at Central Trades and Labor Union Hall, at 2228 Olive street, last night, said prohibition was the cause of immorality in the "dry" states. She said prohibitionists were half mad and American saloons were hideous in comparison to European drinking places.

She declared every creative instinct needed a stimulant to counteract the tremendous mental exertion. It mattered not what the stimulant, she said. "Persons who do not drink or sing are evil or stupid," Miss Goldman declared, "and the stupid are the worst." She cited a number of authors, among them Balzac, Poe and Burns, and said they used alcoholic stimulants after great mental reactions. In prohibition states, she said, culture is dead.

'DEAD' WOMAN BROUGHT TO LIFE NEAR RECOVERY

Now Conscious, Recalls Nothing That Occured While She Was Under Anesthetic.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 5.—Mrs. Walter W. Akers, who is declared by three doctors to have died while undergoing a major operation Wednesday and to have been restored to life after 10 minutes has regained consciousness and, in the opinion of physicians attending her, will fully recover.

Mrs. Akers has no recollection of anything unusual while she was under the influence of the anesthetic.

When Mrs. Akers was believed to have died, one of the surgeons inserted his hand through an abdominal incision and manipulated the woman's heart with his hand, while oxygen was administered and artificial respiration induced.

BUTTER CUT TO 19 CENTS

MONTGOMERY CITY, Mo., Dec. 5.—The cost of living was reduced in this part of the State today when local merchants quoted fine country butter at 19 and 20 cents a pound. One merchant sold over 200 pounds at 19 cents. The fine pastures have made butter cheap.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 5.—Liabilities of $563,573 and assets of $634,810 are shown in the schedules of the [illegible] Refrigerator and Ice Machine Co. of Kenosha against which an involuntary bankruptcy petition recently was filed. The concern was adjudicated a bankrupt in United States District Court today.

WOMAN SLAYER PLEADS GUILTY AND IS PAROLED

Mrs. Ada Owsley, who shot and killed her husband, Ben S. Owsley, at their home, 3836 Cottage avenue, March 1, 1914, was permitted to plead guilty yesterday to the charge of manslaughter in the fourth degree and on recommendation of Assitant Circuit Attorney McCullen she was fined $500 and paroled.

Mrs. Owsley was tried early in May for the killing of her husband. The jury, after being out 44 hours, could not agree. Nine favored conviction of manslaughter and a fine. The other three favored acquittal. The testimony was that there was a quarrel and Owsley attacked his wife and was striking her when she shot him.

Mrs. Owsley said she did not feel that she was guilty, but that she had made the plea rather than go through the ordeal of another trial, even though she was confident that on another trial she would be acquitted.

EARLY OPENING OF STOCK EXCHANGE NOW IS EXPECTED

BIG LOANS ARE LIKELY

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted financial weekly review, says:

"It is altogether desirable, from every point of view, that the Stock Exchange should extend its present tentative arrangements, as soon as is reasonably warranted, to the status of a free, open market. Naturally this does not mean that unrestricted trading ought immediately to be adopted and minimum prices abandoned.

"The Stock Exchange authorities and the financial community are still testing the actual character of a complicated financial situation whose outcome in relation to the markets, whether immediate or ultimate, is marked out by no clear precedent in financial history.

"This test has not yet been long enough pursued to establish positive conclusions. But the very purpose must which inspires it infers that the testing process must be progressive and must move forward step by step in the direction of normal conditions of investment trading.

"The one unquestionable fact is that, sooner or later, an unrestricted open market must be restored. If extensive European liquidation of American securities is inevitable, we shall sooner or later have to meet it. Indeed, there is some force in the argument that in so far as absorption of foreign capital in the war loans is bound to be an influence on such realizing sales, it may be better to accept the situation in the earlier, rather than the later stages of the long-term borrowing by the European Powers.

Early Stock Trading Expected.

"All this the Stock Exchange authorities unquestionably recognize, and it is now apparent that they are taking successive forward steps with such general facts in view. Next week there is to be the granting to transactions in listed stocks a degree of freedom similar to that allowed this week to bonds. The next step may be the tentative and progressive lowering of minimum quotations, whereby a more convincing test of actual conditions will begin.

"The time and manner in which each successive action in this direction will be taken out, in the nature of things, depend on the result of the preceding extension of facilities. Thus far, it is agreed on all hands, that the preliminary test which began last Saturday has thrown most encouraging light on the general position of affairs. Whatever reservation of judgment may be made, in view of the restriction on permitted prices, the salient fact remains that the market of this week has been unquestionably strong, that a very respectable volume of genuine investment buying has been witnessed daily and that neither in bonds nor stocks has there been any evidence of a tendency to press on the minimum price level.

"This reassuring fact is naturally ascribed in Wall Street to such other visible evidence of return to normal as the extinction of the loan certificates and the rapid retirement of emergency bank note issues. Yet such unofficial trading as has occurred even at London has lately presented similar signs of cheerfulness, and it is not unreasonable to ask whether the week's security markets have not also been reflecting a more favorable view of the situation of the war itself.

New Loans Are Likely.

"The chances are that some of the foreign Governments, which for the first time in their history are purchasing supplies in the United States, will soon negotiate additional loans with bankers here. Several applications of that nature are pending and it is probable, in view of the decline in money rates, that fresh advances will be made by the bankers of this city, at the exceptionally high rates that are being offered for accommodation of that character.

"Some of the banks, therefore, are likely to invest their funds in foreign loans, instead of making further purchases of short-term notes at the high prices now prevailing for these securities.

"The indications are that certain transactions of this nature have already been put through privately, as the propositions made have been very attractive, and in nearly all cases coupled with the stipulation that the proceeds of the loans, large or small, should be expended for goods manufactured or purchased in this country.

"The short-term note is still popular enough with investors of the United States, to make it relatively easy for the bankers to place a foreign Government security at a 6 per cent basis. If all such issues did not have something of a war hazard about them, they would be taken readily by the banking houses which have them under consideration today.

"All the Wall street banks have been large lenders of money this week around 3½ per cent on call, and the bidding for high-grade mercantile paper has been so strong, by banks here and at the West, that the rate has fallen within the last few days to 4¼ per cent, as against the 8 per cent level charged during the period of acute tension a few weeks ago.

Bank Rates Reduced.

"This explains why the Federal reserve banks of many cities have been forced to reduce their rediscount rates for 30-day paper, which is now taken by eight of the 12 reserve banks at 5½ per cent. A week ago, this rate was named by only five of these banks. The chances are that the outside market rates will be further reduced, because of the difficulty that many banks are experiencing in employing their loanable funds to good advantage.

"It will not have been forgotten how in August, even with the Stock Exchange shut down completely, all other markets whose action could reflect the inferences from the course of the campaign, moved adversely during the German advance on Paris. The adverse movement at that time, of foreign exchange for instance, was admitted by everyone to mean that the German advance foreshadowed a very prolonged and stubborn war. The retreat of the German armies from the Marne was similarly accompanied by an immediate turn in foreign exchange rates in the direction of a normal basis, as well as by a fall in wheat.

"It is not by any means impossible that the developments on this week's market for securities may have reflected inferences, from the recent military news, that events such as would promise shortening of the war are now in progress.

"This is dealing with conjectures; but the experience, even of the past four months, has shown that a definite relation has existed between the actual movement of the markets and the vicissitudes of the European war. It is at any rate obvious that the progress of recuperation must still in large degree depend on this consideration.

"A rather prevalent Wall street theory, that the fortunes of the investment market will depend on the nature of the Interstate Commerce Commission's forthcoming rate decision, must be judged in the light of these other facts. The feeling as to the decision is quite natural.

"There are certainly, in the existing situation, very strong reasons for the granting of higher rates, both to offset the difficulties of the market for new securities and to avert, so far as possible, such unfavorable judgment of our railways earning power as might tend at this critical juncture to stimulate foreign realizing or discourage fresh home investment. Reasonable concessions would do much to emphasize the present drift towards real financial hopefulness. But the larger influences unfolding on the Continent of Europe will remain."

GREAT EASE IN MONEY FEATURE IN LONDON MART

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—"The noteworthy factor in the situation is the great ease in money rates, which is so real that subscribers to the £350,000,000 sterling war loan are beginning to pay in full, although the option of payment by installments would defer such final settlement until the closing week of April. Apart from any larger economic causes, this money plethora on Lombard street reflects the Government's large loan operations through the bank—to Russia, for instance—all of which means new supplies put out on the open market.

"The situation as a whole is satisfactory, though the increasing tendency to freedom in genuine commercial business is tempered by caution, especially in lines of financial accommodations which might assist the enemy. Of course, also, it is recognised that the huge war expenditure must eventually affect every money center.

"Germany is likely to be the first to feel any real distress. For ourselves, I can testify from direct personal knowledge to the relative soundness of the position here, and the genuine success of the war loan. The one unhealthy feature here, the overplus of money, is duly recognized and allowed for.

Stock Exchange Opening.

"The wish to reopen our Stock Exchange in January is general, but as yet the deadlock in such plans continues, and the Treasury is expected to impose rigid restrictions on the trading. This hesitation is increased by knowledge of the position at Berlin, and by reports from New York that Germany has been selling securities on your Stock Exchange.

"But meantime the satisfactory condition exists of the gradual liquidation of outstanding speculative positions. There is in fact a belief in some quarters that immediate resumption of free business would be more awkward for the bears than for the bulls.

"We hear from your side the suggestion that the German Reichsbank must be including certain paper issues in its reported gold holdings. There is, however, no good reason to suppose that those holdings are other than what is officially stated. The real point is, however, that the bank's accumulation of gold has been made possible only through the prodigious expansion of the fiduciary issue. That means that the actual position is not favorable.

The Foreign Bank Position.

"A fair comparison with the Bank of England shows that, since the war began, the Reichsbank's stock of coin and bullion has risen 16,000,000 pounds sterling, while ours is up 32,000,000 pounds sterling, and that the Reichbank's active note circulation has expanded 106,000,000 pounds sterling, as against only 6,000,000 sterling here.

"In the matter of treasury notes, the German issue has been increased 27,000,000 pounds sterling, with no gold held against it, whereas our 34,000,000 pounds sterling currency notes are supported by a specially earmarked holding of 13,500,000 pounds sterling gold.

"The movement of French exchange is interesting, but artificial. Any real efforts to remit funds from Paris to London would probably cause a sharp rise in the rate."

ROCK ISLAND BONDS A FIRM SPOT IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Early dealings in bonds on the Stock Exchange today were devoid of special interest. Trading was lighter, with few price changes. The only transaction of any size was a sale of $24,500 Pennsylvania Railroad convertibles at 99, unchanged. Rock Island collateral 4s and debenture 5s gained half a point each.

Continued buying of Rock Island constituted the sole feature of the brief session. The collateral 4s gained 3 points. The rise in the Rock Island issues was attributed to the reported perfection of a reorganisation plan. Dealings in the general list were no less active than on the previous day, but the number of bonds traded in was decidedly smaller and the undertone more heavy.

Among the few important declines were Florida East Coast 4½s, which lost 1¾; Lackawanna Steel 5s of 1923, 3⅛, and Baltimore & Ohio 3½s, one.

Banks Show a Loss in Surplus Reserves.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The statement of the actual condition of clearing house banks and trust companies for the week shows that they hold $119,465,630 reserve in excess of legal requirements. This is a decrease of $11,710,460 from last week.

This is the first report of the actual condition of the banks since the full statement was discontinued by the clearing house at the beginning of the war.

The statement follows: Actual condition: Loans, etc., $2,180,199,000, increase $22,482,000. Reserve in own vaults (B), $336,116,000; decrease, $9,305,000. Reserve in Federal Reserve Bank, $94,179,000; decrease, $1,470,000. Reserve in other depositories, $28,595,000; increase, $1,794,000. Net demand deposits, $1,969,047,000; increase, $15,193,000. Net time deposits, $90,343,000; decrease, $4,579,000. Circulation, $65,216,000; decrease, $8,777,000. (B)—Of which $261,538,000 is specie. Aggregate reserve, $458,890,000. Excess reserves, $119,465,630; decrease, $11,710,460.

Summary of State banks and trust companies in Greater New York not included in clearing house statement: Loans, etc., $558,132,800; decrease, $1,453,800. Specie, $42,142,900; increase, $370,400. Legal tenders, $12,262,100; decrease, $136,300. Total deposits, $638,051,400; increase, $3,105,900. Banks' cash reserve in vault, $11,988,900. Trust companies' cash reserve in vault, $42,416,100.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The consolidated statement of condition of the 12 Federal reserve banks with the close of business Dec. 4, made public today by the Federal Reserve Board, shows little difference from that of a week ago. It follows:

Resources—Gold coin and certificates, $230,912,000; legal tender notes, silver certificates and subsidiary coin, $32,020,000. Total, $262,932,000. Bills discounted and loans—Maturities within 30 days, $7,724,000; maturities within 60 days, $1,025,000; other, $1,095,000. Total, $9,844,000. All other resources, $308,000. Total resources, $273,084,000.

Liabilities—Capital paid in, $18,047,000; reserve deposits, $251,067,000; Federal reserve notes in circulation (net amount), $3,970,000. Total liabilities, $273,084,000.

Gold reserve against all liabilities, 90 per cent; cash reserve against all liabilities, 108 per cent; cash reserve against liabilities after setting aside 40 per cent gold reserve against Federal reserve notes in circulation, 104 per cent.

A statement accompanying the report of condition points out that the banks apparently are observing the board's recommendations that a large percentage of the paper discounted be of not longer maturity than 30 days. The statement says:

"Cash holdings and deposits show small changes as compared with the previous week, while gold holdings show an increase of about 3,000,000, largely offset by reduction in other cash holdings. Rediscounts amount in round figures to $10,000,000 and transactions are reported by all 12 of the banks.

"The increase over the previous week thus indicated is nearly $2,500,000. More than 75 per cent of the paper discounted with the reserve banks matures within 30 days, while New York, Chicago and St. Louis rank in the order stated as regards rediscount business. The aggregate amount of capital shown is slightly different from that reported last week, as a result of adjustments which have been necessary in the capital account of several of the member banks.

"In this week's statement report is made for the first time of the net amount of Federal reserve notes in circulation. The item differs from that reported under the same heading last week, because it shows the net liability of Federal reserve banks after deducting from the gross amount in circulation the amount in gold or other lawful money deposited by reserve banks with Federal reserve agents to retire outstanding notes.

"A memorandum is shown on the statement indicating the difference between the gross and net amounts of notes in circulation. The increase during the past week in Federal reserve notes in circulation is $2,405,000, but the net increase in bank liability in such notes is only $1,250,000, owing to the depositing of lawful money to retire notes.

FEDERAL REPORTS ON COTTON CROP DUE THIS WEEK

Indications Forecast Total 1914 Growth Estimate Will Be 16,000,000 Bales.

The coming week will be marked by the issuance of two important Government reports on cotton. On Dec. 8, the Census Bureau will issue a report showing the number of bales ginned to Dec. 1, and on Dec. 10 the Department of Agriculture will issue the estimate of the total growth of the cotton crop of 1914.

The ginning report will be interesting chiefly because from it may be gathered some idea of what the estimate of the crop will be. As the last ginning report showed the greatest amount of cotton ever ginned in one season up to that date, it is not unreasonable to expect that the next report will not cut down that gain, although it is generally believed that ginning has been accomplished with more than usual rapidity this season. It is natural to compare this crop with the crop of 1911, because, as we progress into the season, more and more are people becoming convinced that there will be no very great difference in quantity between the two crops.

In 1911 there were ginned between Nov. 14 and Dec. 1 about 1,500,000 bales. In 1913, in the same period, there were ginned 1,644,000 bales. Up to Nov. 14, this year, there had been ginned 11,624,708 bales. Should there be ginned in the interval to Dec. 1 1,500,000 bales, the total would be 13,125,000 bales. The average of five years shows that 86.5 per cent of the total ginning is accomplished by Dec. 1. This average percentage, applied to the probable ginning this year, would indicate a total ginning of about 15,175,000 bales.

Crop of 16,000,000 Bales Forecast.

Here it is not out of place to recall that the Department of Agriculture on Sept. 25 stated that the condition of the growing crop at that time indicated a production of about 15,360,000 bales of 500 pounds gross weight. Taking into consideration the fact that the ginning figures are running bales, these totals are not far apart. At the time of the estimate mentioned the department gave expectation of 600,000 bales of linters to be added to the total ginning to make up the total crop. Of interest are private estimates that have been made in the past few days.

The Times-Picayune estimates the crop at 15,710,000 bales, exclusive of linters. The average estimate of 128 Memphis cotton men is 15,529,969 bales, the highest being 16,250,000 bales. What of the disposition of this crop? Has the effect of the big crop and the light demand been discounted so far as prices are concerned?

In the Farmers' Bulletin, issued by the Department of Agriculture, the following is significant: "The average price to producers on Nov. 1, 1914, was 6.3 cents per pound. On the same date in 1913 the average price was 13 cents. In 1912 it was 10.9; in 1911, 8.8, and in 1910, 14 cents per pound. On Oct. 1, 1914, producers were paid an average of 7.8 cents; one month earlier, on Sept. 1, the average was 8.7 cents."

Here is a decline of nearly 2½ cents per pound within two months. At the present time, although the Government figures are not available, the price is probably not any lower than on Nov. 1, although there is more cotton in warehouse gins and on farms.

Visible Supply Deceptive.

This is some indication that prices are nearing the bottom. As has been pointed out in these columns before, the visible supply of cotton, as shown in the figures we are accustomed to consult before forming opinions on the market, is a deceptive element. This year we will have to reckon largely with the cotton that has not come forward. At what price must the farmer sell, and at what price will he sell his surplus if the market should advance?

Without going too largely into figures the situation at the present time is somewhat like this:

We are assured of a big crop, in any event second only to one, and approximating 16,000,000 bales of cotton. Exports so far have reached a total of less than one-third of the exports to the same date last year. Exports have steadily increased, up to 10 days ago, and the falling off since then is attributed to lack of steamships, which should only be temporary.

American mills are behind in their taking of cotton by more than 300,000 bales. They are beginning to reap the benefits of lack of competition abroad, however, by being practically the only source of supply for warring nations who need clothing immediately. In fact, it is said that the call for immediate delivery is the only thing in the way of almost unlimited orders for all kinds of cotton goods. American mills have felt the loss of Far Eastern markets for their cloth. There is some sign of awakening in that quarter and, if it comes, the price of cloth will advance as domestic mills have all they can do just now.

The money market in this country is easier. Reports show that trade balances are growing heavily in favor of the United States, lessening the need for shipping gold, and the exchange markets are improving. Speculation is being attracted to cotton by the low price. It should not be forgotten that cotton carried past Jan. 1 is not distressed cotton in the common use of the term.

Price Now Greatest Factor.

The greatest factor in the curtailment of production next year is the price, and if the price remains at the present level there is nothing attractive for the farmer in selling cotton to get money for another crop of cotton. After Jan. 1, generally speaking, the great incentive to sell will be the need of money for a new crop.

"Reports from a prominent Memphis seed house are to the effect that more wheat, oats and other small grain are being sold to farmers for seeding purposes than ever before."

From the standpoint of the speculator, where lies the greatest hope for gain? Selling at the present low price, or buying, with the hope of reduced acreage and a possible cessation of hostilities in Europe after it is too late to replant to cotton acreage that lies idle or is planted to grain?

Cotton has reached a level in price where it is not wisdom for anyone to press the debtor farmer, and if the farmer sells it will be of his own volition. Undoubtedly there is a mighty weight of cotton over the market, but declines will not serve to bring that cotton out. Nothing but an advance will do it, and the question is at what price level will the farmer begin to sell when the advance begins.

In the past he has been a fine and tenacious holder of cotton when the inducements were not so great as now. He can only be judged by past performances.

Abroad there is little hope for an improvement among spinners, except in England, Italy, and some of the smaller cotton-consuming countries. Business with England is improving. As England exports about 80 per cent of her cotton goods, a great deal of cotton could be used there, provided labor scarcity does not interfere, and provided England maintains her supremacy on the sea.

It is reported that Liverpool will adopt the United States Government standard grades of cotton, a long step toward uniform international standards and an incentive to larger business.

PRICES ON CATTLE LOWER; FEDERAL ORDERS PUZZLING

Receipts at National Stock Yards.

	This Wk.	Last Wk.	Year Ago
Cattle	26,000	23,083	16,526
Hogs	70,000	54,210	63,000
Sheep	15,000	8,700	11,347
Horses & mules	5,000	5,677	3,561

The last week was characterized by liberal receipts and a considerable lower trade in all classes of cattle. The Federal authorities, in connection with the quarantine, early in the week, announced a modification which permitted the shipment of stock cattle into Southern Illinois, but later in the week this order was countermanded. Again an order stated that fat cattle could only be shipped to points having Federal inspection. These orders proved puzzling to marketers and caused considerable confusion. The beef trade bordered on demoralization toward the close of the week, the buying being again largely in the hands of local packers. General trade was anywhere from 25@75c lower, the latter cases being evident where common steers were involved. Nothing prime was offered.

The withdrawal of the local butchers late in the week from the butcher cattle trade, to conform with the newest quarantine order, caused a very narrow demand for heifers and the trade in commoner classes bordered on demoralization toward the end of the week. Common heifers were well-nigh unsalable at any kind of prices, and these kinds should be kept off the market by all means. Best heifers were around a quarter lower, medium kinds 40@50c off and commoner classes 75c@$1 lower. Best cows were around 25c lower, as were canners and cutters. Medium grade cows were 25@50c lower and hard to sell at the loss.

Vealers opened steady, but closed 50@75c lower, with a late top of $10.25. Bulls were 15@25c under the previous week's prices. Stockers and feeders opened with a quiet demand, but when the new order was received, this division of the market again had to close down. Consequently, there was no demand for stockers and feeders, and they should be kept at home.

Supply in the quarantine division was of moderate volume, and with the exception of one load of common Oklahoma steers, came entirely from Southeastern territory. Canners, she-stuff and yearlings, with a few loads of range steers and some oxen, made up the big end of the showing. Trade in canners and best she-stuff opened strong, but later declined 25@35c and closed on this basis. Yearlings and heretics were on a 10c higher basis. Steers sold generally steady, some Louisiana rangers bringing $5.60 and Arkansas range steers $5.40.

Hogs on New Low Basis.

A good liberal supply of hogs was received at all Western markets, which enabled buyers to hammer prices and reduce values to the lowest basis they have been on in more than a year. All grades suffered on account of the excessive runs, but it seemed that the pigs and lightweights showed a greater loss than the medium and heavy hogs.

At the outset the best hogs were selling at $7.60 and the bulk went at $7.30@7.50, but later the highest price was only $7.15 and the bulk went at $6.75@7. The shippers were unable to get into the trade as well as they would have liked, as they were not able to make shipments to a lot of points until after the middle of the week. Packers were naturally glad of an opportunity to get their hogs at lower values.

A plain class of mixed hogs after the middle of the week went at $6.60@7, and rough heavy throwout packers at $6.25@6.50. This makes pretty cheap meat to the packers, as compared with what they have been able to turn out during the past several months. Best grades of lights found sale at $6.75@7.10; best pigs at $6.35@6.85, and the poor to fair grades at $5.25@6.25, according to quality and size.

Sheep Prices Drop Lower.

A right good supply of sheep was received and, as a result, prices on both sheep and lambs were reduced 25@50c. The sheep showed as great a loss as the lambs, although there was not a great many sheep on sale. The arrivals included quite a good lot of Western lambs, fed in Missouri and Illinois. There was also quite a good lot of goats on the market.

Best lambs early in the week went at $9@9.25, but later the very same sorts were going at $8.75@9, and found bids rather slow, while there was a plain to medium class of lambs going at $8.25@8.65 and culls and others that were not any better than culls at $6.75@7.50. Yearlings went at $7@7.50 as a rule.

At the opening of the week sheep to the slaughterers were all selling at $5.50, the same as the previous week, but later they were bringing only $5, while choppers sold at $4.25@4.65, canners and culls at $3@4 and bucks at $4.25@4.50. Goats went largely at $3.50@4.

Trade in horses last week was much the same as it has been during the past few months. The only buyers on the market were war horse purchasers, and they took all available types at good, stiff prices. The auction supply was light. In fact, lighter supplies are going through the auction at present than has been the case in some time. Buyers are scarce and trade is at a low ebb.

There was absolutely nothing doing in the mule trade. Few buyers were in and sellers are advising shippers to keep off the market under present conditions.

Coffee Is Firm in New York Market.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The coffee market was firm and higher today on reports of a better spot demand and the continued strength of the primary markets, which some local traders attribute to an improving European demand. Trading remained quiet in futures, but after opening dull at an advance of 1 point, the market closed firm at a net advance of 7 to 11 points on buying by trade interests. HIGHER CABLES CAUSE BUYING IN CHICAGO PIT

Export Sales Also Favor the Bull Traders; Corn Futures Are Quiet.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Strength of prices at Liverpool and reports that Italy was purchasing on a large scale in Argentina gave an upward turn today to the wheat market here. There were also advices that the weather in Argentina had become unsettled and was interfering with the success of the harvest. Realizing sales here by longs, however, tended somewhat to restrict the advance. After opening ⅛@¼c to ⅜@½c higher, the market showed a disposition to react.

Corn hardened with wheat. Smallness of country offerings operated, too, as a help for the bulls. The opening, which was ⅛@¼c to ⅜c higher was followed by a slight further gain.

Higher prices for hogs made the provision market firm. Selling was only of a scattered sort.

Subsequently, excessive receipts compared with shipments formed a drag on the corn market. Prices closed steady at the same as last night to 1-16c lower.

Heavy shipments of wheat to England and France advanced futures sharply in the late trading last week. In the early markets there was considerable irregularity on a large run of wheat to domestic primary markets and favorable reports on the condition of the Argentine crop. Shorts covered contracts freely in the late trading, however, and with buying by elevator and milling interests, following the export sales, the market developed a strong bullish tone.

Export figures for last week, issued by Bradstreets, showed the second largest shipments in the country's history, and these were only exceeded a short time ago, when the foreign buying demand was sensational. Best opinion among traders is that the demand for wheat and flour from abroad will shortly assume record proportions again, in which case much higher prices are predicted.

At the moment the bearish feature in the domestic situation is the visible supply, which now is some 20,000,000 bushels in excess of last year and will probably show some further increase in the near future.

The decrease in the visible supply last week caused considerable comment, as the same thing happened a year ago, and it afterward developed that stocks on the way to Buffalo and some other supplies were not included in the total.

In the following week last year the visible gained nearly 4,000,000 bu, lost 2,000,000 bu on Dec. 13, gained 2,000,000 bu Dec. 20, over 1,000,000 bu Dec. 27, about 400,000 bu Jan. 3, and touched the high point of the year at 63,331,000 bu on Jan. 10. It will be interesting to note if the visible supply increases next Monday, under similar conditions of last year.

The Oklahoma State crop report places winter wheat condition at 98, against 103 last year and 96 at harvest last July.

Exports of domestic wheat and flour from the United States in November, compiled on the same basis as last month, when it showed within 200,000 bu of the official returns, were 24,250,000 bu, against 9,617,030 bu last year. Total exports from July 1 to Nov. 30 are 133,753,000 bu, against 81,497,000 bu last year. Total exports for the crop year of 1912-14 were 145,500,000 bu.

Yesterday's wheat market rose in price and was helped by advancing quotations at Liverpool and by reports that Italy was purchasing on a large scale in Argentina. The market closed firm.

Reports of increased speculative buying at Liverpool, which was said to have accompanied a material upturn there in the price of wheat, had a tendency to draw rather more attention than usual to the foreign outlook.

Assertions in regard to the Italian Government having contracted to take one-third of the estimated surplus of the Argentine crop added to the bullish sentiment, although not by any means being given full credence. On the contrary a majority of traders seemed to lean for the time being to the idea that high ocean freights and war risks would prove an effectual barrier to heavy Argentine shipments and that the United States would not have any burdensome competition during the next two months.

Wheat Outlook Good.

Milling and Grain News says: "Correspondents' reports show winter wheat needs moisture in sections of Kansas and the Southwest, but generally speaking the crop is in good condition for this season, and increased acreage more than making up for a slight loss in condition figure was very high. A sudden cold wave, however, migh cause considerable damage, as the wheat plant is practically without snow covering over the entire growing belt.

Broomhall's foreign crop summary said:

France—Weather has been generally favorable for field work and a normal acreage is claimed except in the war district. Little threshing has been done, as labor is employed in preparation for the new crop.

Australia—Our agent confirms a greatly reduced crop. Exports of wheat undoubtedly will be nil and importation will be necessary.

Russia—Crop conditions about normal.

Austria-Hungary—Crop prospects are bad as it is understood that very little seeding has been done. All available men have been forced into the army.

Italy—Outlook for the new crop

555-POUND WHEELS ROLLED OVER 88 BUSY CITY BLOCKS

Several hundred St. Louisans did a lot of sidestepping yesterday. They did it because they were on the streets and had to get out of the way of two standard 33-inch car wheels, one of which weighed 565 pounds and the other 555 pounds.

Each was being rolled by a negro. This unusual spectacle was St. Louis' first "car-wheel Marathon," and before it was over the two negroes had rolled the big wheels over 88 city blocks, from the Coliseum to the west end of the McKinley Bridge, and then back to the Coliseum, on wet pavements.

They did not get a cent for their effort, but if a negro pageant, being held this week in the Coliseum, proves financially successful, they hope to be rewarded. Their stunt was an advertisement for the pageant.

The wheelmen were J. C. Bratton of 3030 Lawton avenue, who weighs 220 pounds, and Isaiah Nelson of 2025 Clark avenue, weighing 175 pounds. They covered the 88 blocks in 2h, 14m., including four stops, one for 15 minutes at the bridge and the other three for 3-minute rests. Bratton won, finishing 50 feet, about four seconds, ahead.

Both contestants are employed rolling wheels at the American Car foundry in Granite City. At their daily toil they cover seven or eight miles a day piloting wheels around the factory. Both wore knickerbockers and sweater coats, giving them a grotesque appearance, which added to the gaiety along the route. To protect their hands, which were in constant contact with the rolling wheels, they wore buckskin gloves. The race started at 10:20 a. m.

Ministers Weigh Wheels.

J. L. Laxton and O. S. Brighton from the street department were on hand to see that the heavy wheels did not injure the pavement. Two negro pastors, the Rev. B. G. Shaw and the Rev. W. S. Brooks of St. Paul's M. E. Church, weighed the wheels on scales. Several other men who had announced their willingness to enter the contest backed out.

Bratton and Nelson straightened up the two wheels as if they were children's hoops, and gave them a twirl on the flange to see if they balanced well. Then they started off.

The heavy wheels were sent along at such a rapid rate that it was difficult for the gallery, following the contestants, to keep up with them. At times the wheels wobbled dangerously but the rollers thrust a leather gloved hand against them or stuck out one foot to correct the balance, apparently without thought that the foot would be crushed if the wheel fell.

They kept the wheels going upon the flange at a slight angle. Sometimes the wheels would be between their knees, but when a down grade was reached the flying wheels often were 10 feet ahead of the men and going at a rate which could only be followed by lively running.

Drivers in wagons and autos hastily gave the rollers the right of way and then paused to inquire from the crowd what it was all about.

The route of the rollers was west on Locust from the Coliseum to Beaumont, to Morgan, to Fourteenth, to Gay, to Twelfth, and then north to McKinley bridge, returning over the same route. Just after reaching Morgan street the first pronounced down grade was encountered. In a moment the gallery was left behind. The rollers, running at full speed, were from five to 10 feet behind their heavy hoops, but if a wagon or an auto approached they sprinted and shot the wheels past as gently as if toying with a barrel hoop.

Wagon Missed by Foot.

Great skill was shown by the rollers at a point where Twelfth street runs into Branch, where they were obliged to give the wheels an S movement upon a sharp down grade. One loaded coal wagon came east on Branch just at the corner. The driver was completely puzzled by the flying wheels and pulled up just in the middle of the road. The rollers, by a quick dash, caught their wheels and safely rounded the wagon and horse with a foot to spare.

The men were obliged literally to put their shoulders to the wheels on portions of the return trip from the bridge, but were constantly encouraged by shouts of the fast-increasing gallery. It was 12:34 when they rolled their wheels back into the Coliseum.

WASHINGTON U. MEDICAL EXHIBIT EVOKES PRAISE

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Commenting on Washington University in connection with the notice of the medico-historical exhibition in St. Louis, the Evening Post says in part:

"St. Louis has an exhibition whose cheerful lessons recall Mark Tapley with his experience of the malarial West. Prominent space is given to a poineer physician named John Sappington, who introduced quinine into the lowlands of Missouri early in the last century.

"The day of patent medicines in that region is by no means so completely past that some famous quackeries supported by our fathers could not be put on view.

"In looking for an object lesson in modern medical achievement, St. Louis need go no farther than her own Washington University Medical School, with its splendid list of connected hospitals."

COUNTERFEITER'S WARNING LETTER LED TO ARRESTS

When a counterfeiter in Enid, Ok., read in the Post-Dispatch a description of a counterfeit $10 bill that was being circulated, he concluded it was time to stop circulating the bogus bills in territory reached by the Post-Dispatch. He wrote a letter to Lee Odell, "handcuff king," cautioning him to cease passing the bills in Post-Dispatch territory. "You will have to stay out of the territory of the Post-Dispatch to do any good," the letter read.

The letter, signed "Rube," found among Odell's effects after his arrest here, led to the arrest of Martin L. Hamman of Enid, who is alleged to be the writer of the letter.

Writer Easily Traced.

"Rube" referred to the Post-Dispatch story as "a swell write-up" and said it made him feel a little bit arch-necked. The letter went on to say that "Rube" was still working at the same place, that he had been repairing his machines and was trying to correct the defects in the counterfeit bill that had been mentioned in the "write-up," and promised to send 150 fine bills to Odell for circulation outside of Post-Dispatch territory.

Without any assistance from Odell, Steve Connell, chief secret service officer, traced the letter to Enid and obtained evidence which led him to order Hamman's arrest.

The bogus bills have been circulated in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Texas. A number have been passed in St. Louis. A secret service man arrived in St. Louis today from Kansas City with 15 of the bills that had been passed there.

The Post-Dispatch article referred to by "Rube" was printed Nov. 21. It described in detail the counterfeit. The writer of the letter knew that the article would be widely read by bankers and business men and that it would be dangerous after that to try to pass any of the bills.

That the article did make the passing of the bills hazardous was proven by the arrest of Odell, which resulted from the reading of the printed description of the bill by Iron Mountain ticket agents, one of whom, after receiving one of the bills for a ticket, telegraphed to St. Louis. Secret service men arrested Odell as he stepped from the train and several of the bills were found in his possession.

WIFE DIVORCES FORMER FEDERAL OFFICEHOLDER

Mrs. Agnes B. Sessinghaus obtained a divorce in Circuit Judge Hitchcock's court Friday from Oscar F. Sessinghaus, formerly Assistant United States District Attorney at St. Louis.

Sessinghaus did not contest the suit. Since the separation, Aug. 14 last, he has been living at the home of his mother, Mrs. Gustavus Sessinghaus, at 5136 Von Versen avenue.

His wife alleged he refused to take her to places of amusement, would leave home at night and remain away all night and that he treated her coldly. This caused her great mental anguish, she said. They were married April 13, 1903, and lived at 4236 Olive street. She was Miss Agnes B. Graff of Alton.

How it was lost
How it was returned

POST-DISPATCH:
I desire to thank you and your valuable paper for the prompt and efficient results I obtained through your LOST and FOUND Ads. On Friday evening I lost my purse on a Wellston car. I had no positive means of identification other than that it contained one $20 bill and a Columbian half dollar. My husband suggested that I insert an ad in your paper. I remonstrated, saying it would do no good, but he insisted, saying there were lots of honest people. One insertion was sufficient. It was returned Sunday morning by a gentleman whose name was Thorn. I am sorry that he did not give his first name. He resides on Eugenia Av., but cannot call to mind the exact number (I trust if this comes to his notice he will supply me with the above). I handed the man the reward I offered, which was $10.00, and he remarked, "Mrs. Patrick, I do not like to take this, but I have been out of work so long, having had to give up my job on account of my eyes, you don't know what my wife and I have experienced. I told him he had earned it and it was his. He accepted the money, saying "I owe my Doctor $6.00. I can now pay him and get my eyes treated."
Honesty is a priceless jewel, but I have been led to believe that it is not so rare after all.
Respectfully,
MRS. D. A. PATRICK.

Here is a LOST PURSE experience:

How it was lost
How it was returned

POST-DISPATCH:
I desire to thank you and your valuable paper for the prompt and efficient results I obtained through your LOST and FOUND Ads. On Friday evening I lost my purse on a Wellston car. I had no positive means of identification other than that it contained one $20 bill and a Columbian half dollar. My husband suggested that I insert an ad in your paper. I remonstrated, saying it would do no good, but he insisted, saying there were lots of honest people. One insertion was sufficient. It was returned Sunday morning by a gentleman whose name was Thorn. I am sorry that he did not give his first name. He resides on Eugenia Av., but cannot call to mind the exact number (I trust if this comes to his notice he will supply me with the above). I handed the man the reward I offered, which was $10.00, and he remarked, "Mrs. Patrick, I do not like to take this, but I have been out of work so long, having had to give up my job on account of my eyes, you don't know what my wife and I have experienced. I told him he had earned it and it was his. He accepted the money, saying "I owe my Doctor $6.00. I can now pay him and get my eyes treated."
Honesty is a priceless jewel, but I have been led to believe that it is not so rare after all.
Respectfully,
MRS. D. A. PATRICK.

The rental business is improving, according to F. E. Abell, who reports he is receiving many inquiries for modern homes, quite a number having been rented during the last few days, to former residents of East St. Louis. Abell attributes the increase in the rental business to the certainty of prosperous conditions in East St. Louis in the near future. The opening of the industrial plants, together with the improvement of the country roads and the establishment of the free bridge are given as the cause

POST-DISPATCH WANT AD FINDS A MOTHER FOR BABY

Woman Will Adopt Tiny Son of Destitute Father and Provide for Education.

Mike Slonski's 13-months-old son has found a mother, through a want ad which the father, who lives at 2446 South Third street, placed Friday in the Post-Dispatch, stating that he wished to give the boy away because his mother was dead and he himself was out of work. Mrs. Minnie Bowersmith of 2136 Chouteau avenue took the child to her home last night. She said she would apply for adoption papers tomorrow and would give her foster son an education.

Slonski received 18 inquiries about the baby and several persons came to see him about it. Some of them said they wanted the boy, but would have to consult with the other members of their families.

Mrs. Bowersmith satisfied Slonski that she would meet the requirements that the child should have a good home and an education. She has been married a second time, is 41 years old and has three children, only one of whom, Marie Henson, 18, is at home.

When she went to get the child it had no clothes except one thin dress, and she had to buy a coat and cap at a nearby store before taking the child home.

Slonski, an Austrian, who has been in America seven years, said he had been unable to properly care for his baby since his wife died last September. His 12-year-old daughter, Mary, has had to stay out of school to care for the baby. Slonski had hoped to keep the child, but Friday, after he had been out of work three weeks, found he was unable to pay his rent, and decided to try to find a home for it where it could get a good education and not have to become a laborer as he is.

If Slonski cannot find a job in St. Louis he will go to the Illinois coal fields to seek work to keep his daughter and his 9-year-old son, Stanley, in school. He said he would not part with Stanley unless poverty compels him to do so.

8 CITY MANAGERS MEET AND TELL OF SUCCESS

DAYTON, O., Dec. 5.—The first convention of city managers ever held in the United States concluded its sessions in Springfield, O., yesterday. Eight of the 15 city managers of American cities were present. An interesting feature of the meeting was the narration by each manager of his experiences.

They all had taken over city governments that had issued promissory notes to meet current expenses in excess of current revenue. Each had reduced or entirely paid off these notes and none had borrowed more. Henry M. Waite, City Manager of Dayton, pointed out that this demonstrates that the city manager form of government can operate efficiently and economically.

Leroy H. Newman, 25 years old, of 1311 Longfellow boulevard, a member of an advertising agency, was indicted yesterday by the grand jury on a charge of attempted assault made on Miss Glencora Ketchum, 17 years old, daughter of Mrs. Adele Ketchum of 3011 Eads avenue. Miss Ketchum is a McKinley High School student.

Newman was first arrested last Tuesday night, charged with enticing Miss Ketchum from her home Sunday night, when he took her for an automobile drive. Miss Ketchum and her mother had complained to Assistant Circuit Attorney Baer of the action of Newman and Baer laid the matter before the grand jury.

Miss Ketchum said Newman called at her home for her Sunday night, after she and her mother first met him the night before at the Liederkranz Club, from which he took them home in his automobile.

Mrs. Ketchum said that although Newman asked her to accompany them, she allowed her daughter to go with him Sunday night unchaperoned because he claimed to be a friend of members of their family.

Miss Ketchum declared that Newman, saying he wanted her to meet some of his friends, took her to 3945 McPherson avenue, where the alleged offense occurred.

Newman was not at his home or office last night when his statement was sought.

SIX INDICTMENTS SECRET TILL ARRESTS ARE MADE

Six indictments, the names of those accused in which were withheld pending arrests, were returned by the grand jury yesterday.

It was recalled that among the witnesses examined were Sheriff Dickmann and Richard Walsh, his bookkeeper, who testified that a shortage of $5000 was discovered in the accounts of Thomas B. Kilcullin, former chief execution deputy in the Sheriff's office.

Up to last July, when the shortage was found, Kilcullin had been employed in the Sheriff's office for 18 years and had been execution deputy for 12 years. He repaid $2797 of the missing amount to Dickmann, and demand for the rest was made upon the surety company which bonded him.

Circuit Attorney Harvey took up the Kilcullin case on his own initiative, as no complaint was made to him by either Dickmann or the bonding company.

INTER-CITY LAW LIKE MANN ACT, WISCONSIN IDEA

Many Radical Social Reforms Advocated by Legislative Investigating Committee.

MORALS COURT PROPOSED

State Police, Heavy Penalties, Strict Hotel and Dance Hall Regulations Advocated.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 5.—Fifteen months' study and investigation by a legislative committee resulted in radical proposals for law enforcement and better social conditions, summarized in an exhaustive report which was filed with the Secretary of State today.

The greatest cause of commercialized immorality, the report says, is the use of intoxicating liquors. Contributory causes are public dancehalls, roadhouses, poorly lighted parks and public places, lack of responsibility by parents, nonenforcement of laws by public officials, lack of public amusement and recreation facilities, and automobiles. The committee found that the wage question had no material relation to the evil. The committee recommends:

That a morals court be established in cities of the first class, with exclusive jurisdiction over all cases involving moral offenses.

That a law similar to the Mann act, applicable between cities, villages and towns of the State, be enacted.

Would Have State Police.

That a permanent state police department be established in this State, with power to investigate immoral practices and that local communities organize private associations to assist officers in the enforcement of laws.

That the sale of liquor be prohibited within or in connection with dance halls.

That a liquor license may be automatically revoked upon a plea of guilty or conviction or upon nolo contendere for violation of any of the moral laws.

That public dance halls procure licenses, and that dances be supervised by a policewoman or other competent officer.

That all hotels, rooming and lodging houses be required to secure licenses; that they keep permanent registers of the names of all guests to be signed in their own handwriting, the registers to show the hour of assignment of rooms and their surrender, with penalties for using fictitious names.

That the publicity of ownership be established by requiring the name of owners on the front of all hotels and rooming houses.

Would Raise Age Consent.

That the age of consent be raised from 14 years in the case of any female and 18 years in the case of male of a previous chaste character to 18 and 21 years respectively.

That an industrial home for women be established, to be equipped with hospital facilities for treatment of disease, women convicted of imoral practices to be committed there for treatment and training.

That in cities of the first three classes special classes for subnormal children be established in the public schools and that, where necessary, the State furnish free text books, meals and clothing to make compulsory education effective.

That social neighborhood centers be developed in connection with the school system.

That employers of domestic servants be required to furnish them with a suitable room in which to receive company.

That the number of hours of labor for domestic servants be fixed by law.

"The man's part in the social evil," says the commitee, "is despicable and mean enough to merit the harshest terms of reproach and disgust. The exploiter of woman for money gain is worthy to be the lowest outcast in society, rather than the weaker, ignorant or unfortunate person exploited. The penalties for such exploitations must be made most severe and must come with absolute certainty upon conviction.

"The fine system, which is unjust and worthless for both men and women, should be abolished; male offenders should be punished for contempt of court when they follow the common [illegible] of giving a fictitious name before [illegible] court and should be given a [illegible] to a penal institution, not [illegible] the payment of fines, thus [illegible] their guilt with the state."

The report gives the number of immoral places existing in the larger cities of the State which meet with little or no official interference.

MRS. HARRISON WILL NOT LET MAYOR RUN AGAIN

Chicagoan Says He Will Use Some "Blarney," but She Says "No."

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Whether Mayor Carter H. Harrison will be a candidate for re-election depends on Mrs. Harrison, and she says he will not, he smilingly told a deputation which waited on him today. He asserted he had promised his wife he would not again run for office, and she was holding him to the promise.

Harrison promised to use some "blarney" in an effort to influence Mrs. Harrison to change her decision, but when she was asked by reporters if she would release the Mayor from his promise she replied:

"Indeed, I will not. The city has had him long enough. I want him for a while now."

Some politicians are skeptical of the Mayor's attitude and believe at a favorable time he will announce his candidacy.

NATIONAL DEFENSE BOARD FAVORED BY CIVIC FEDERATION

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Resolutions advocating the creation by Congress of a council of national defense were adopted today by the National Civic Federation at the last day of its conference here. The duties of the council would be "to consider, decide and report to Congress what legislation is necessary to provide for the national defense without waste or unnecessary expense."

The speakers included Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of Leland Stanford University; Col. Robert M. Thompson of the Navy League of the United States; Franklin P. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Samuel Gompers.

Dr. Jordan declared we should protest against an agitation for more armament at a time when the nations of the earth are crumbling each other because of their "perfect equipment." "The lesson of this war is that preparedness for war brings war," he declared.

Col. Thompson advocated a navy that would be able to hold the sea for a year against any invaders. "That would give us time to prepare our army for the field," he said.

"As long as other nations arm themselves to the teeth, we must be fairly ready to protect ourselves," he said.

FRISCO REPORTS LOW FARE RETURNS IN MISSOURI

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Dec. 5.—Figures submitted in evidence by the Frisco Railroad before the Public Service Commission in the rate hearing here this week show that the road receives less money for hauling a passenger one mile in Missouri than in any other of six states reported, except Kansas, and that the lower return in Kansas is due to an interstate rate of 2 cents per mile which is in force there.

In Kansas, according to the figures submitted, the road receives 1.89 cents per passenger mile; in Missouri 2.04 cents; in Oklahoma 2.121 cents; in Arkansas 2.381 cents; in Mississippi 2.462 and in Alabama 2.419 cents.

The commission stopped taking evidence today and Chairman Atkinson announced that the hearing will not be resumed until Dec. 15.

W. M. Rodehaver, representing the shipping interests of the state, filed a motion asking that two public hearings be held, one in St. Louis and one in Kansas City, at which the shippers will offer evidence in support of their protest against the proposed increase in freight rates. The commission granted the hearings, but the dates were not set.

EXTRA CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR BRITISH CHILDREN

American Ship May Supply Many Families Not Affected by Casualty Lists.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Although officials of the local Government board and volunteers at Earl's Court headquarters are working 14 to 15 hours a day in an effort to complete the tabulation of the hundreds of youthful beneficiaries of the United States Santa Claus ship in the British Isles, it is still impossible to give an accurate estimate of the number who will receive gifts from the American children on Christmas eve.

The chief difficulty lies in the fact that each day brings a fresh addition to the casualty lists of British soldiers and sailors, and thus batches of new names must be added to the host of youngsters to whom the American Kris Kringle must pay a visit.

There are more than enough presents to go around, and the likelihood is that many children whose fathers neither have been killed nor wounded while fighting for their country will be given a share of the Yuletide cargo.

ENGLISH ACTRESS ENDS NEW YORK ENGAGEMENT

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Broadway's appetite for Shakspeare may be measured by the fact Phyllis Neilson-Terry, the young English star, at the Liberty Theater, in what was to have been a repretoire of her Shakespearean successes, ended her engagement tonight after two weeks as Viola in "Twelfth Night."

The London critics have called her the most brilliant actress of classical roles on the English stage, and the New York audiences were exceedingly enthusiastic but unfortunately small.

He Gets Only a Fair Profit; Charge to Consumer Advanced by Distribution Costs.

Sometimes objection is made in the cities to the retail prices asked for milk and eggs. Many think that 5 and 6 cents is enough to pay for a quart of milk, and that when eggs are higher than 25 cents a dozen someone is getting too large a profit. The owner of the cow or hen is not to blame for high prices, and the prices he gets are not the prices the consumer pays.

In New York the retail price for milk is 10 cents a quart, whereas the producer, the farmer, gets about 4 cents. This is not a high price, surely, and it is not a price which pays the producer a fair profit. Six cents is consumed in the expense of distribution. This expense seems too great. It probably is too great. At any rate the dairy farmer isn't getting too much.

It's the same with eggs. Poultry raisers often do not get over half what the consumer in a city like St. Louis or Chicago pays. In the middle of the winter season most poultrymen cannot produce eggs at a cost of 25 cents a dozen. A few exceptionally successful poultry raisers can produce them more cheaply than this, but prices are, and must be, based upon the average cost of production.

I do not like to see extremely high prices for any food product, but in winter, when eggs are scarce, high prices are inevitable. On both coasts, in cities like Boston, New York, San Francisco and Los Angeles, prices of 50 to 60 cents for eggs in winter are now common, but the egg producers living near those cities are not making an undue profit. It costs real money to produce a dozen real eggs in winter, especially at current high prices for feed.

The effort of the producer more and more should be to get a larger share of the price which the consumer pays. Some expense of distribution is necessary, but it should not be larger than necessary. This is self-evident.

Poultry Problems Solved

Ducks and Chickens.

Is it too cold at this season of year to leave chickens out of doors? Is it all right to allow chickens and ducks to drink together? Is the following a good ration to feed both ducks and chickens, equal parts of wheat bran and corn meal, with a little beef scrap, and grain feed twice a day? Is a curtain front house suitable for ducks?—A. E., St. Louis.

It is not usually too cold at this season to allow poultry to run out doors. In fact, fowls may be allowed to be out most days in this climate. It is good for them. They should have protection from cold winds. A protected southern exposure is good. It is not a good plan to compel chickens and ducks to drink together. The duck is not cleanly in its drinking habits. The ration is not a bad one, but I should feed the ducks less whole grain than the chickens, or none at all. An open front house is all right for ducks.

Roup.

What shall I do when a fowl's left eye gets sore? First it gets red, then swells out and a white skin forms over it. What is a good egg shell producer?—Rural Route, St. Louis.

The symptoms are not quite clear, but I think it is a case of roup. When the case is as bad, as I suppose this is, I should use the ax if the fowl is not especially valuable. Some commercial roup cures which can be obtained at your poultry supply house are good. I have frequently recommended permanganate of potash in these columns. Wash thoroughly with a strong solution. Also immerse the fowl's head in the solution twice daily. Put enough permanganate of potash in the drinking water to color it a claret color. For good egg shells, feed a good ration and see that the birds have plenty of oyster shells and grit.

Runner Ducks.

I have some runner ducks that are eight months old, and have not laid. The woman who sold them to me told me not to feed corn, but to feed potato peelings, etc., which I cook for them. They also get oyster shells. Should they have grit in addition? Should they not lay at this age if fed properly?—B. B., Salem, Ill.

The ration you name is a good one. I have recommended a similar one on this page. Add about 10 per cent of sand to your mash. Be sure there is plenty of good water near the feeding place. The ducks should lay at eight months but don't get impatient. If they are good runners, they will probably make up for the lost time after they get started.

Indigestion or Poison.

Can you tell me what is the matter with my ducks and geese? I went out to the henhouse Monday evening and found two geese dead and three ducks sick. Two of the ducks died today. I opened one of them and there was a lot of blood in the intestines. I gave one of them castor oil and it passed a lot of blood. They were all healthy until Monday.—Mrs. Mc., St. Louis.

I am sorry to say that I cannot tell what was the matter. It looks like a case of poisoning. At any rate, it must have been some digestive trouble. The castor oil treatment is good.

Mouth Canker.

Is canker in the mouth ever fatal? Is there a cure? Is roup fatal, and is there a cure? My Plymouth Rocks have not laid since August. Do you think it possible they will lay before Jan. 1? Should April pullets be laying now? Am I feeding right? For breakfast I give a warm wet mash of equal parts of bran and oats, at noon plenty of green stuff, table scraps and commercial egg food boiled, at night whole corn one part, oats three parts in a litter of straw. I have a pullet the pupil of whose eye is turned back toward the corner of the eyelids, and a thick solid flake of matter covers the entire eye, which when removed leaves the eyeball inflamed.—A. Reader, Omaha, Neb.

Canker in the mouth is often fatal. It is also contagious. A cure is not always easy. Several treatments are used. Remove the canker, and apply some peroxide of hydrogen with a dropper. When thoroughly cleaned apply some vaseline. Repeat daily. I do not claim this is a sure cure. There is no sure cure. Canker is similar to roup. It is often a development of roup. A treatment for roup frequently given in this department is the use of permanganate of potash. Put the crystals in luke warm water. Wash the head and mouth thoroughly. Hold the head under the water. Repeat the treatment daily, or twice a day if the case is bad. There are also commercial roup cures of value. See your local poultry supply house. I cannot tell whether your hens will lay by Jan. 1. They should if they are in good condition. Plymouth Rock pullets hatched in April should begin laying about this time. You feed well, perhaps too liberally for mature fowls. I should feed dry mash and grains instead of wet mash. Twice a day is often enough, except the green stuff at noon. You do not mention wheat. I should make that at least a third of the total rations.

Fattening Chickens Is an Easy Process

In going through the city meat shops or markets where dressed poultry is sold, it is surprising to note the large per cent of birds that are lean, or at best only half fat. One cannot help wondering why fowls should be sent to market in this condition, when but a few days extra feeding would not only have put on additional weight resulting in more profits, but it would also have made the birds more saleable. No matter whether the buyer likes chicken grease or not, he or she will always pass by the lean, bony carcass if there is a plump, well-rounded fowl to be had.

One feature of poultry raising that farm poultrymen especially are slow to learn, is the fact that 10 days or two weeks' full feeding will do wonders with a lean bird, toward putting it into market condition. Few other living things will put on weight so rapidly, in proportion to size, as will a chicken. Poultry buyers appreciate this possibility and thousands of odds and ends from farm poultry yards are gathered up every year, put in small coops, fed heavily on fattening feed for about two weeks, and then sold on the market for from 50 to 100 per cent or more above what was paid for the birds in the first place.

There is no special knack or secret in fattening market poultry, in fact few other clas of stock may be fattened with so little trouble. Small coops or crates where the birds cannot be too free in running and flying about, thus reducing weight through exercise, should first be provided. Then let them have plenty of corn meal, middlings and skimmilk or buttermilk mixed up in a sloppy mash, so they can eat great quantities of it without choking, as is the case with a dry or crumbly mash. However, this is not intended to mean that this wet feed should be kept before the birds by the trough or dishful all the time. The better way is to feed just as much as the birds will clean up readily, and repeat this several times a day. They should never have so much that they will leave part of it after eating their fill.

English Pen and Nebraska Hen Win

MOUNTAIN GROVE, Mo., Dec. 5.—The egg laying contest conducted by the Missouri State Poultry Experiment Station here, which closed Nov. 30, was won by a pen of 10 single comb white leghorns owned by Tom Barron of Catforth, England, with a total of 2296 eggs for the year.

Poultry Paragraphs

Middlings and corn meal, wet with skim milk, make a fine forcing feed for the birds that are to be marketed or eaten.

Unpreparedness usually costs dearly when a cold snap drops in on us, by a falling off in the supply for the egg basket.

Put a row of nests under the droppings platform, covered with a hinged lid. Have openings for the hens to enter at the back and see how well satisfied you will be with this arrangement. It is the favorite with many.

It Makes Hens Lay

Pratts Poultry Regulator

Gets the laying hens into the egg-a-day class and starts up the lazy ones. Puts life and vigor into the whole flock and gives a healthy relish to the feed.

Costs but a trifle—the extra eggs pay for it many times over. Come in and let us prove to you that it will make hens lay. If it fails, we will give you your money back. 25-lb. pail only $2.50. In packages at 25c., 50c. and $1.00.

30 BIRDS IN EACH OF 2 PENS BETTER THAN SIXTY IN ONE

"How large shall I build my poultry house?" is a question frequently asked by beginners in poultry raising. The average poultryman, on a city lot, cannot keep a large flock, hence a house with a single room, or at most two, will answer his purposes. Fifty birds will do very well in a single compartment, but smaller numbers will do better still. If the flock consists of more than 50 birds, it will pay to divide it and put a partition in the house and pen. Thirty birds in each of two pens will do much better than 60 birds in a single pen as large as the other two combined.

The floor space to allow per bird depends on the breed and size. Most poultrymen consider from four to five square feet to the bird sufficient. This, of course, means that this amount of space should be vacant and available for the use of the birds. Space occupied by nest boxes, roosts and other equipment should not be included in this calculation. By arranging the interior fixtures after modern plans, almost every foot of floor space can be used by the birds. In this arrangement the dropping board is high enough to permit the nest boxes being placed just underneath the front edge and high enough off the floor so that the birds can easily pass under them. Fountains and feed hoppers may be hung to the walls and thus be out of the way.

Where fowls have unlimited range, the problem of keeping them in health is not a difficult one. Under these conditions the birds themselves find the quality, quantity and variety of feeds that nature requires. Where the birds must be penned up, the problem of keeping them healthy is not as difficult as is sometimes thought. Clean, comfortable houses and yards mean half the battle is won. The other half is food of proper variety, which includes good water. Long articles and even books have been written on this subject, but at the last analysis it is all contained in these two factors—clean comfortable housing and a balanced feed ration.

Awards Are Made in Junior Poultry Test

Charles G. Deuber, 15, of Yeatman High School, made the best grade in the junior poultry test which was a feature of the recent State Poultry Show at the Coliseum. His grade was 98 on the 20 questions. Next in rank were Dewey Lang, 16, and Daniel Weller, 16, also Yeatman pupils. Deuber, who is a Black Minorca fancier and who won a blue and three yellow ribbons with his birds at the show, took the trio of that strain offered as a prize. Lang and Weller divided the second prize of $2.50, as they were tied with 96 per cent.

Among the girls, Emma Janssan, 15, made 95 per cent and selected a trio of White Leghorns. Melba Brunsen won the second prize with 92 per cent.

The first question was: "When were the first chickens tamed?" The next: "Name and describe the first two breeds tamed." The contestants were required to describe Asiatics, Mediterraneans, White Rocks and other well-defined breeds. The remaining questions referred to construction of poultry houses, feeds and physiology.

The exhibited hen that was held to have a chance of beating the world laying record scored 236 eggs in the year, beating Lady Showyou's record by five eggs and tying the Boston record.

Blue Sky Law Unconstitutional.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Dec. 5.—The West Virginia "blue sky" law was held to be unconstitutional by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals today. The opinion declares the West Virginia statute seeks to restrain interstate commerce and to abridge the rights of citizens to buy and sell property.

$275,000 REALTY DEALS CLOSED BY DANIEL CATLIN

ASSESSMENTS FOR PARKWAY PROPOSED

Thomas Wright Favors Getting 25 Per Cent of Cost From Abutting Property, 25 From Benefit District, 50 From City Generally.

By Berry Moore.

Daniel Catlin figured yesterday as purchaser and seller in transactions embracing holdings in downtown St. Louis and in the West End aggregating in price $275,000. As purchaser he acquired the six-story building at 811 Washington avenue, at a valuation of $200,000, and as seller he disposed of a frontage of 500 feet in the Catlin tract for $75,000.

The purchaser in the latter instance was the Excelsior Realty Co., composed of clients of the Holbrook-Blackwelder Real Estate Trust Co. The Washington avenue building, which was also owned by a client of the Holbrook-Blackwelder company, occupies a lot 29x150 feet. The Schwardtman Toy Co. occupies the building.

Catlin owns several million dollars' worth of downtown property, including a frontage of 108 feet at the southwest corner of Washington avenue and Eighth street and the northeast corner of Olive and Twelfth street, 100x125 feet. The latter was purchased of the late W. W. Culver in December 1913, the price paid being reported as $600,000. As part payment for the Olive street corner, Catlin conveyed to Culver the southwest corner of Olive and Seventeenth streets.

Wright's Holdings Rival Catlin's.

Thos. Wright, vice-president of the Third National Bank, is the only rival of Catlin in the ownership of Olive street property.

The Catlin tract, which is on the north line of Forest Park, and which extends from Union boulevard to Skinker road, was originally owned by Catlin, who disposed of it just prior to the 1904 World's Fair to a syndicate, of which Moses Greenwood was the prime mover, for $1,000,000.

The syndicate let the tract to the exposition company for the Pike for a rental of $200,000. The tract was again disposed of to a syndicate comprising a score of St. Louis millionaires, which subdivided it into lots 200x530 feet.

As a member of the subdivision syndicate Catlin reserved the 500 feet disposed of through the Holbrook-Blackwelder company. While the price paid by Catlin for his reservation was $200 a foot, or $100,000, the price at which he sold the land to the Excelsior Real Estate Co. is at the rate of $150 a front foot.

Only Two Homes in Catlin Tract.

Another purchaser in the Catlin tract last week was Claude E. Vrooman, his purchase including a 100-foot strip on Lindell drive. The lot was owned by P. C. and Emily C. Maffitt, who purchased it for $200 a front foot. Cornet & Zeibig negotiated the sale.

Only two houses, the homes of Walker Hill, president of the Mechanics-American National Bank, and Frank O. Watts, president of the Third National Bank, have been erected in the Catlin tract.

As indicated by sales in both the city and the suburbs the St. Louis real estate market already is reflecting the stimulus given by the parkway project, which now probably will be followed with the proposed [illegible]way. The big combination proj[illegible] is the absorbing topic in both [illegible]ty and financial circles.

The project, Zeibig believes, would [illegible] the nucleus of a comprehensive rapid transit system. He believes it would prove a factor in the growth of the city and the suburbs as well. As planned, the subway would insure a great deal of business along the parkway, he declares.

Assessment Plan Suggested.

Zeibig expressed sentiments, in this connection, of a majority of St. Louis realty men. All admit that the proposed parkway would be both an advantage and an attraction to the city. There, however, is a diversity of opinion as to how the cost to build it shall be proportioned.

Thomas Wright, vice-president of the Third National Bank, at first was opposed to the parkway, but now suggests how the assessments to pay for it should be made.

"First, I would tax the abutting property on both sides of the property on a basis of 25 per cent of its assessed value," he says. "Then I would form a benefit district, both north and south and east and west of the parkway, for a general tax levy of 25 per cent. The other 50 per cent would be charged against the city generally. This, in my opinion, would be the fairest way."

Vice-President Wright is one of the largest owners of real estate in the business center of the city. His holdings include several valuable Olive street corners, both east and west of Twelfth street, most of which probably would be subject to assessment. As the abutting land are problematical, the belief is that a wide benefit district should be decided upon. The district, the opinion is ventured by real estate agents, as well as by property owners, should extend for a mile on each side of the Parkway, and west of King's highway and east to Fourth street. Downtown St. Louis, it is believed, would derive the maximum benefit from the proposed improvement, and should bear its quota of expense incident to it.

Parkway Plan Buoys Market.

The laying out of the benefit district, and the manner of assessment, would be entirely the work of three commissioners named by the Circuit Court. Although only $3 a day would be paid for this service, several prominent real estate men have signified a desire to act as commissioners. These include Gus W. Niemann, formerly president of the Title Guaranty Trust Co., and A. O. Rule, who served with distinction as president of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange. Both favor a comprehensive benefit district with a general distribution of the costs.

B. E. Grace of the Grace Bros. Real Estate Co., suggests that all owners of property in the benefit district, send information of their property to the Title Guaranty Trust Co., which has the city contract for examining title deeds.

James M. Rohan, vice-president of the Title Guaranty Co., announces that his company is prepared to deliver the titles to the property in the 21 blocks to be condemned, within 60 days, if necessary.

While there have been no sales on either side of the Parkway since the passage of the bill by the House of Delegates, there have been many inquiries as to the price of property on both Chestnut and Market streets. The indications are that a movement in this district is at hand and several good transactions are to be made soon.

BRITTON HOME IN COUNTY IS SOLD TO URSULINE SISTERS

Girls' Seminary to Be Near Kirkwood; Property Said to Have Brought $100,000.

A new and beautiful site has been acquired by the sisters of the Ursuline Convent and Academy, which is now located at Twelfth street and Russell avenue. It is the country home of F. H. Britton, president of the St. Louis Southwestern (Cotton Belt) Railroad, on the west side of the Sappington road, just east of Kirkwood, in the heart of one of the choicest residence districts of St. Louis County.

The price paid, it is understood, was $100,000.

The place adjoins the former home of the late James L. Blair, now owned by J. R. Curlee, vice-president of the Carleton Dry Goods Co. The house has 20 rooms, and is on a tract comprising 30 acres. A large lake, tennis courts and a detached bowling alley are among the improvements. The home formerly belonged to the late Joseph Franklin, who was president of the William Barr Dry Goods Co.

The sale was handled by B. F. Thomas, representing the sisters, and Edward L. Bakewell, representing Britton. The sisters intend to convert the property into one of the most beautiful seminaries for young women in the West. They will move early next year from the present location in South St. Louis to the new site, and will occupy the old home, to remain there until a new building, for which plans are well under way, is completed.

The City Isolation Hospital, construction of which is under way, and the estimated cost of which is $1,000,000, will comprise a remarkable group of buildings. The site is at the southwest corner of Arsenal street and Sublette avenue, and is 900 feet square, with a frontage of about a block and a half on Arsenal street, between the infirmary and the sanitarium.

The plans are the result of much investigation on the part of the Hospital Commissioner, Dr. Cleveland H. Shutt, both at home and abroad. They comprise many of the best features of other notable hospitals, and, in addition, several original ideas.

All the infectious diseases, excepting smallpox, will be treated in this institution.

The general principle governing the arrangements of the institution is that persons suffering from a similar disease will be isolated completely from those suffering from other diseases. Also those suffering from the same disease in different stages will be isolated as much as possible.

The principles of isolation are adapted from the principles of surgical cleanliness. Diphtheria, measles and scarlet fever will be handled in three wards or "V" shaped buildings, and the fourth, arranged for sectional isolation, will handle a number of the less severe and infrequent diseases. Private rooms will be provided in each building.

Playgrounds, Fresh Air and Sunshine.

The doctors and employes will be domiciled in the building to which they are assigned, and live in small cottages located immediately in front of the building to which they are attached, and connected to it by an open cloister.

Commodious sun parlors will be constructed at each end of the wards and in addition a playground with a small shelter house will be arranged in the "V" of each building. Convalescent children accordingly, will be isolated, and at the same time will have plenty of freedom for fresh air and sunshine.

No porter or general employe will be permitted to enter any of the buildings further than a service room at one side of the main entrance. Here all food and linens will be delivered and all soiled linen and utensils will be removed after thorough sterilization. The chinaware and linen for each building will be marked with a color designating the building in which it is to be used.

In such an institution there is a great necessity for facilities to isolate cases of doubtful diagnosis. For this purpose the central or observation building is designed.

Sixteen Hospitals Under One Roof.

It is in reality 16 separate little hospitals under one roof, arranged with a complete air or corridor space around each unit. Each unit is so designed that a patient or an entire family can be isolated, together with a nurse, in a small room adjoining if necessary. Patients will, of course, remain in these rooms only until a certain diagnosis can be made, then they will be forwarded to the building in which their disease is treated.

All patients coming to the hospital will be received in a special receiving building, closely connected with the observation building. If the diagnosis is certain the patient will be wheeled through the cloisters to the proper building. Otherwise he will be placed in one of the isolation units in the observation building until the diagnosis can be made. The observation building will be in constant use for such purposes.

The center building in front is the administration building, where will reside the superintendent and resident physician, the superintendent of nurses, the druggist and other employes. Here will be located the general offices, and where persons shall apply for permission to see sick friends or to learn how they are progressing.

Telephone and Signal Service.

The center building in the background, which will be for commissary and kitchen purposes, will also house the male and female employes not employed directly in any of the other buildings. The entire institution will be connected by telephone and signal service.

The best authorities state that infectious diseases are transmitted only by contact, either directly with the person or with some object which has come in contact with the diseased person. The public will be definitely protected, since no patient will get further from the building than in the inclosed playground of each building, and the entire group of buildings will be surrounded with an ornamental and nonclimbable fence.

Since a public funeral cannot be held for persons dying of infectious diseases (unless special and rather expensive arrangements are made a special mortuary has been designed. The plan is so arranged that the body can be kept in a refrigerator until the friends or the relatives decide its burial, then it can be removed to a special preparation room, where it will be wrapped in a cloth saturated with a special chemical and then placed in a casket, which will be closed and fumigated in the room.

The casket will then be removed to the mortuary chapel, where services may be held.

The plans were prepared by Guy C. Mariner, architect, who is supervising the construction of buildings under the direction of E. R. Kinsey, President of the Board of Public Improvements.

Real estate mortgages and first mortgage notes are one of the strongest features of the St. Louis business situation in the past year, in the opinion of J. B. Moberly, real estate loan officer of the Mercantile Trust Co. This company is one of the largest lenders of money on gilt-edge real estate mortgages and sellers of securities of this character in the West. Perhaps the largest.

"At no time," said Moberly yesterday, "has the demand been better than at present for securities based on real estate. While the war caused a depression in many lines of business, it stimulated this class of investment, to judge from the substantial increase in demands since hostilities began. This is the silver lining in the dark clouds on the commercial and financial horizon."

"Last week witnessed the end of the fiscal year of the Mercantile Trust Co., and it also marked the closing of the most successful twelve months in the history of the real estate loan department. The totals for the year showed a large increase over 1913, but the months immediately following the declaration of war exhibited the greatest strength. In those months the increased demand brought the sales to a remarkable gain over the corresponding months of 1913. And that period of last year was above the standard of preceding years.

"The increase is due to the closing of other markets for investment, and the diversion of new funds into this channel by investors, who have heretofore paid scant attention to mortgages. Many of these buyers were recognized as former investors in corporation securities. Their entry in this field will doubtless be permanent, as the strength and durability of real estate securities has never been more forcibly emphasized than under the present conditions.

"A large amount of dormant money has also found its way into mortgage loans, and helped materially in bringing about this satisfactory condition.

"Another gratifying feature was a number of demands recently received from Europe, while many customers in the war zone show a desire to increase their holdings in real estate notes as soon as conditions will permit forwarding of drafts and the receipt of securities with safety.

"Altogether," Mr. Moberly said in conclusion, "there was abundant evidence, throughout the year, of the making of good loans on real estate, and that general investors are becoming more of the belief that mortgages, particularly first mortgage real estate serial notes, represent the highest type of investment."

STORE BUILDINGS IN WEST WALNUT LEASED

The Kroger Grocery Co. has leased a store at the southeast corner of Florissant and Gilmore avenues.

Another store in this block was leased for a gents' furnishing goods shop. With the sale of houses and lots at West Walnut Manor the subdivision is being rapidly built up.

Leahy announced yesterday that in the sale of houses at $380 apiece the century mark had been reached. Sales at the subdivision during the week have been retarded by the rain, but there is no lack of interest, according to reports.

The houses and lots are being sold on terms of $25 cash and $9.27 a month.

Kingsbury Apartments Sold.

The Kingsbury Apartment building at 6009 Kingsbury place was sold yesterday by the Archoefer & Glik Real Estate Co. to Jacob and Arthur Rosenblat. The price paid was not disclosed. The building is three stories. The annual rental is $13,000.

ARRIVAL OF THE RELIEF

IN forwarding this sketch to the illustrated London News, the artist, Frederic Villiers named it: "It's a long way to Tipperary—but I'm not downhearted." It portrays an incident of individual heroism in a bomb-proof shelter along the English battle line near Ypres. Villiers describes the affair as follows: "After a shell fire, lasting from dusk until three in the following afternoon, a certain position was rushed by the Germans. In one section of the deep shelter trenches, now prevailing on the battle front, only one of the 15 British soldiers was standing when a relief party arrived; and he kept firing until he fell unconscious from his wounds. He was an Irishman. Some 20 Germans were mixed up in this particular fight and were killed."

SELF-RESPECT—AMERICA'S GIFT TO THE WORLD

By G. LOWES DICKINSON.

This author is one of the severest critics of our United States. He wrote a widely discussed work: "Letters of a Chinese Official," which excited Secretary of State Bryan to strenuous reply. This grudging tribute to our world contribution is taken from "Appearances," his latest book.

AMERICA has, broadly speaking, no waste products. The wreckage, everywhere evident in Europe, is not evident there. Men do not lose their self-respect, they win it; they do not drop out, they work in. This is the great result, not of American institutions or ideas, but of American opportunities.

It is the poor immigrant who ought to sing the praises of this continent. He alone has the proper point of view; and he, unfortunately, is dumb; but often when I have contemplated with dreary disgust, in the outskirts of New York, the hideous, wooden shanties planted askew in wastes of garbage, and remembered Naples or Genoa or Venice, suddenly it has been borne in upon me that the Italians living there feel that they have their feet on the ladder leading to paradise; that for the first time they have before them a prospect and a hope; and that while they have lost, or are losing their manners, their beauty, and their charm, they have gained something which, in their eyes, and perhaps in reality, more than compensates for losses they do not seem to feel, they have gained self-respect, independence, and the allure of the open horizon.

"The vision of America," a friend writes, "is the vision of the lifting up of the millions." This, I believe, is true, and it is America's great contribution to civilization. I do not forget it; but neither shall I dwell upon it; for though it is, I suppose, the most important thing about America, it is not what I come across in my own experience. What strikes more often and more directly home to me is the other fact that America, if she is not burdened by masses lying below the average, is also not inspired by an elite rising above it. Her distinction is the absence of distinction. No wonder Walt Whitman sang the "Divine Average." There was nothing else in America for him to sing; but he should not have called it divine; he should have called it "human, all too human."

Or is it divine? Divine somehow in its potentialities? Divine to a deeper vision than mine? I was writing this at Brooklyn, in a room that looks across the East River to New York. And after putting down those words, "human, all too human," I stepped out onto the terrace. Across the gulf before me went shooting forward and back interminable rows of fiery shuttlers; and on its surface seemed to float blazing basilicas. Beyond rose into the darkness a dazzling tower of light, dusking and shimmering, primrose and green, up to a diadem of gold. About it hung galaxies and constellations, outshining the firmament of stars; and all the air was full of strange voices, more than human, ingeminating Babylonian oracles out of the bosom of night.

This it is that the average man has done, he knows not why; this is the symbol of his work, so much more than himself, so much more than what seems to be itself in the common light of day. America does not know what she is doing, neither do I know, nor any man. But the impulse that drives her, so mean to the critic's eye, has perhaps more significance in the eye of God; and the optimism of this continent, so seeming-frivolous, is justified by reason lying beyond its ken.

ON PEOPLE WHO INTERRUPT

ON a big iron gate, as I was entering the Yale campus yesterday, I saw this sign:

> All Peddlers, Second-Hand Clothing Dealers, Book Agents, Solicitors for any kind of business, Newsboys, Bootblacks and persons other than welcome visitors are hereby prohibited from entering these premises under the penalty of the law.

"That means me," I said to myself; but I walked in. Nobody would know it meant me—people go by clothes, mostly—and I slid through and wandered around under the elms and gazed at the statue of Nathan Hale and read in the library and sat on The Fence and generally did as I liked. (To be accurate, I did not strictly sit on The Fence. That would have been getting too much for nothing, considering who I was and all; but I leaned against it respectfully.)

In the library, as I was slipping about, feeling a little guilty, of course, with all that intellectual grandeur around me, but comfortable and safe and anonymous, one of the librarians called me by name and asked if he could do anything for me.

I got away in a minute. It made me vaguely unhappy. He wouldn't have wanted me there after all—not if he knew, I thought. In his heart of hearts, if he knew, he would side with that big sign on the gate:

"ALL PEDDLERS, SECOND-HAND CLOTHING DEALERS, NEWSBOYS, BOOK AGENTS"——

I thought of it as I came back throught the big gate.

"That sign means you!" I said to myself. "You know it. Yale College does not want a man like you, an unaccounted for, unclassified person, a kind of slicked-up outlaw, or spiritual cowboy—a man with nobody back of him and without a license—just toting his own little ideas around—on the premises."

I did not like to admit this about Yale College, or rather about me—whichever it is, but it is necessary.

Take any man today who is trying to interrupt or get before people what is new in his time, and put him in the middle of the Yale College campus and let him try with his new little idea under his arm to ring one doorbell after the other on those great, proud front doors of All Knowledge on the Yale campus and he would be taken for a book agent.

The question I would put to the reader today is this: How should a man who is by temperament an Interrupter, and who really has to be, and who expects to be shooed, feel and act while he is being shooed? In other words, what is a good, practical, wearing philosophy for a book agent? We are all of us book agents in a way, those of us who are interested in ideas and in the world, and in getting our ideas slid in. People are always taking us for book agents and shooing us.

GERALD STANLEY LEE

What would be a good philosophy for us to have before, during and after being shooed?

Here is mine. I put down these rules for myself or for anybody for what they are worth.

Introductory: Drop bothering about being a book agent and face the music. I say to myself: "I am a book agent. It's all I ever was or ever will be! All I hope to be is a good one before I die. My business is peddling ideas that people know they don't want. I am spending and propose to spend my life in interrupting people, in breaking in with what good manners I have, or bad manners they may think I have, upon all institutionalized, comfortable people, the people who have locked up the great bronze front doors of their minds, and pulled down the curtains, and are sitting by the fire in their slippers. I face this fact and get on with it as well as I can. Toward the life around me, toward the big, severe, forbidding front door of my country, I am a book agent at heart; and, except that I don't propose to be sent around to the back door by anybody with an apron or a degree on, I have a book agent's soul. I pull the bell. I hear it ringing through the halls, without fear and with deep joy! "Let them come on!" I say. Then door after door.

Elijah was a book agent,

NO PEDDLERS ALLOWED ON THE CAMPUS

Getting people to want ideas they don't want is like any other kind of salesmanship. All really successful business consists in interrupting people. As it is a matter of interest to nearly everybody I have thought I would specify two or three practical aids in the art of interrupting.

FIRST—The thing that has to be got right first, in an interruption, is its soul or spirit. The soul of an interruption is the way one feels toward people while one is interrupting them. One must wait before interrupting until one gets this feeling right. It should run as a kind of humming accompaniment or obligato underneath one's words while one is doing it: "THESE PEOPLE I AM INTERRUPTING WANT TO BE INTERRUPTED. THEY MERELY DON'T KNOW IT, AND HAVEN'T MENTIONED IT."

SECOND—One has to believe in interrupting, to know how to do it. It's a kind of religion. Every new value in this world is an interruption. To believe in interruption is to believe in the law of life.

A new baby is an interruption.

THIRD—One must take shooing and waiting as a matter of course. If it were not for the shooing, interruption would not be an art, and if it were not for the waiting it would not be a religion. One must keep sensitive. Like any other salesman one must always hope one is not going to be shooed and never be astonished if one is. When one gets one's reward one can enjoy it, and when one does not, one can enjoy thinking how one is going to enjoy it.

One would like, for instance, to be let in with honors on the Yale campus. I could not help thinking of this sadly as I walked slowly out at last past the great gate and past the book agent sign. The only way I could ever be got in on the Yale campus would be as a statue.

A statue of a man who once had an idea is always in good form.

Churches and colleges run to statues of men who have interrupted them. Bronze radicals, and revolutionists in granite, are much sought after, and are seen everywhere in great glory in all the citadels and cathedrals of the Smooth and the Finished, in the most massive fortress of the Unchangeable. Westminster Abbey has mobs of men who have interrupted it—men who have even said Pooh! to it—standing around on the floor everywhere about the place perfectly at ease and in natural, graceful attitudes, as if they had been born and brought up there. All that can be demanded of an interruption is that, like a new baby, it shall, after a discreet interval—say ten days, or a hundred years—make people love it and forgive it.

If some young man about to take up a career of interrupting people were to ask my advice I would say this: If you are a book agent by temperament, if you are born with a convex or wedge-shape soul and are a natural butter, or slider-in, bone down to interrupting as an art. Study people and yourself. Get results at once. Don't be content to be a hero, or to lean on posterity, or to slump into a statue. Interrupt the way Nature does, some annuals, some perennials. Time your interruption. Tone them in. Warm them up. Then by and by, perhaps, when you are too old to go up and down the world as you do now, with those big baskets of perfectly fresh ideas that nobody wants, ringing doorbells, the people you have interrupted will ring yours, and come in and thank you.

ARE WE "SCARED TO DEATH" BY DOCTORS?

SHAKE WELL BEFORE USI
Use as directed
One teaspoonful every three hours
BERDANIER

Dr. Woods Hutchinson says we are (almost) and that humanity has developed no new diseases since the pyramids were built ✤ "Increase" of various ailments merely due to more complete statistics . . . . . .

CHEER up, all you who fear germs and sickness and contagions! Woods Hutchinson, A. M., M. D., looking the world and his wife over, finds us scared almost to death by the doctors, trembling lest this microbe or that parasite has sneaked in upon us unaware, convinced that we walk daily among a million unseen perils—and tells us to Cheer Up! things aren't half so bad as they are pictured.

It certainly is refreshing, when we are all cast down from reading daily that some new and terrible disease has been discovered, to be informed that people probably were suffering from those same diseases along in the days when the pyramids were building, but didn't know what ailed them. We are positively enchanted when Dr. Hutchinson reminds us that there is almost no known disease whose diagnosis is now equivalent to a death sentence and scarcely a single disease in which a sufficiently early recognition is not merely half but nine-tenths of a cure!

And those wretched bores who prove by percentage tables that within so many years everybody will be suffering from atrophied kidneys or senile dementia! What a mighty swat Dr. Hutchinson takes at their statistics! It gives us a new lease on life when he points out that while one school of mathematicians is proving that we shall all be insane in 1966 another has already demonstrated that in three decades we shall all be dead of Bright's disease. It makes us turn to the back of the dictionary to learn the meaning of the Latin phrase, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, which was merely a refined way of saying that nobody believes a man who has been demonstrated a liar.

Dr. Hutchinson's book, "Civilization and Health" (Houghton-Miflin), is written in that delightful style which has sometimes tempted the American public to forget his high standing as a scientist in remembering what a high batting average he has in literature. Somehow it doesn't seem consistent for a real, learned, highbrow to express his thoughts in the language of Irvin S. Cobb or the spontaneous freshness of an O. Henry. In spite of these peccadilloes, however, it must be admitted that professionally Dr. Hutchinson is "the goods," so that his book is all the more welcome.

Every old-timer may be expected to arise and dissent when the author announces that "Strange as it may seem, we have no proof of the origin of a single new disease since the dawn of recorded history." One can almost hear reverberating the old-timers' chorus that the world is growing weaker and wiser; that we of the present are not as strong or as long-lived as the men of the good old days, before appendicitis was heard of or anyone dreamed that the pituitary gland had any effect upon the stature. In so doing the old-timers are just making the opening the doctor has been waiting for. One can almost see him wink his off eye as he spits on his hands, seizes Samson's ancient weapon and wades in among the Philistines. Before he is through with them he makes the ranks of the old-timers resemble the survivors of the latest charge at Ypres.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson.

He takes Bright's disease, for instance. The alarmists have been clanging away with this gong most industriously for the last few months. Dr. Hutchinson points out that the frequency of increase in this malady has been "probably due chiefly to a most harmless and wholesome phenomenon, the spread of the habit of life insurance and the consequent frequent examinations for albumen.

"It is safe to say," he continues, "that we should not have upon our mortality records more than half as many cases of Bright's disease as we now have, had it not been for this widespread habit among business men of insuring their lives and having routine examinations of their urine made. Almost the first question that a doctor asks nowadays of a patient in whom he discovers Bright's disease is: 'When were you last examined for life insurance?' as such an examination is usually the first thing that attracts the patient's attention to the condition of his kidneys."

Twenty or thirty years ago, he points out, a case of Bright's disease was not brought to the attention of a physician until its ravages were beyond repair. The same things are true, though in less degree, of heart disease and tuberculosis. Yet, because our statistics are better kept nowadays, the chap with a hobby for figures has found it the simplest thing in the world to demonstrate that there is little hope for the next generation but an early tomb.

Their method of fixing responsibility reminds Dr. Hutchinson of the summary judicial proceedings of frontier California days, when an outraged public, at the discovery of a fresh crime, rushed out and hanged a Chinaman. Thus it was that in former times many cases that are now diagnosed as infantile paralysis were explained by the hoary old tradition that a child had fallen from his nurse's arms in infancy and later had developed a life-long lameness. Hookworm and pellagra and cerebro-spinal meningitis rival the poor in the constancy with which they have always dwelt among us. Inasmuch as the old world has worried along with them some millions of years and its population has kept on increasing, Dr. Hutchinson advises us not to be troubled lest we be as one with the dodo in the next thousand years or so.

"The new diseases of civilization," he adds, "are chiefly the results of the old diseases and conditions of barbarism. The remedy for the evils of civilization is more civilization." Then he clears the decks for action against the good-old-days boys, who are continually harping upon the degeneracy of these modern times and are perpetually pulling out the tremolo stop when they reminisce of the sturdy age of our sires. Incidentally he takes a fall out of our pet theories that our wracking, quick-lunch, hurry-up American manner of life is threatening the race with extinction..

"We may be degenerate," he declares, "but there is no valid evidence of the fact. In fact, all such data and records as we have point in exactly the opposite direction. The human race is still steadily moving upward, as it has always done from the days of the jelly-fish and the sea-squirt. * * * Such data as we can secure are practically all on one side, and that, most unexpectedly, shows a steady and well-marked improvement in every respect—physical, mental and moral—for the last century. The only apparent exceptions are a declining birth rate, an increasing divorce rate and an apparent increase in certain classes of crime, all of which, however, we share with all civilized countries."

The author cites United States army statistics to prove that American-born men are taller, heavier, longer-lived, better informed than men of any of the parent stocks across the Atlantic; that American-born men have advanced in all these respects since the Civil War, and the best specimens of American manhood are found in the states of the purest Anglo-Saxon and Scotch-Irish stock—Kentucky, Virginia, Ohio, Missouri and Kansas. From these states came the tallest and brawniest soldiers that volunteered for service in the Spanish War and that these volunteers were taller and brawnier than volunteers from the same states for the Civil War.

To our better and more sanitary and more comfortable ways of living the writer attributes this advance. He points out that children's minds tend to grow just as naturally and irrepressibly as their bodies. Thus it happens that our athletes of today are making better records each year than they made the year before and that American athletes in contests of personal skill, speed and endurance have swept the boards in the Olympic contests. This is not an indication of degeneracy, Hutchinson insists, but of progress. In other words, he intimates that our modern methods are breeding stronger, saner, cleaner boys and girls, just as surely as horsemen are developing better runners and jumpers than the world has ever known.

Even the decrease in the birth rate Hutchinson thinks not an indication of degeneracy, but the contrary. Women no longer bear eight and ten and twelve children which cannot be properly cared for and which bring overwhelming burdens to already weary shoulders. Instead, modern parents are inclined to have as many children as they can care for decently, so that the children who do come have better chances in the world. Nor does he consider divorce an unmitigated evil, thinking it perhaps better for an ill-assorted couple to separate, and possibly mate happily, than to drag out a weary, tortured existence in the galleys of precedent. As for the crime increase, except in homicides, etc., it is largely due to the multiplication of legislature-created misdemeanors and to a greater vigilance of the police.

Things are not only better now than they used to be, according to Hutchinson, but they are going to be better in the future than they are now. Medical science, for one thing, is going to make rapid strides. The doctor of the future

"NEW" DISEASES OLD ROGUES

"ALMOST every new disease when it is first discovered is believed to be as rare as it is new; but often, when its picture has been distributed to the rogues' galleries of our hospital wards and consultation rooms all over the medical world, it comes to be recognized as quite a common criminal.

"Such was the case with appendicitis, and in lesser degree with those two diseases which are exciting so much alarm at present—infantile paralysis and cerebro-spinal meningitis.

"The former, for instance, is now pretty generally recognized as the real 'Ethiopian in the woodpile' of those numerous stories of children who were let fall from their mother's or nurse's arms in infancy, and later developed a life-long lameness or paralysis, while cerebro-spinal meningitis has been helping to stock our blind asylums and our schools for deaf-mutes for centuries."—DR. WOODS HUTCHINSON.

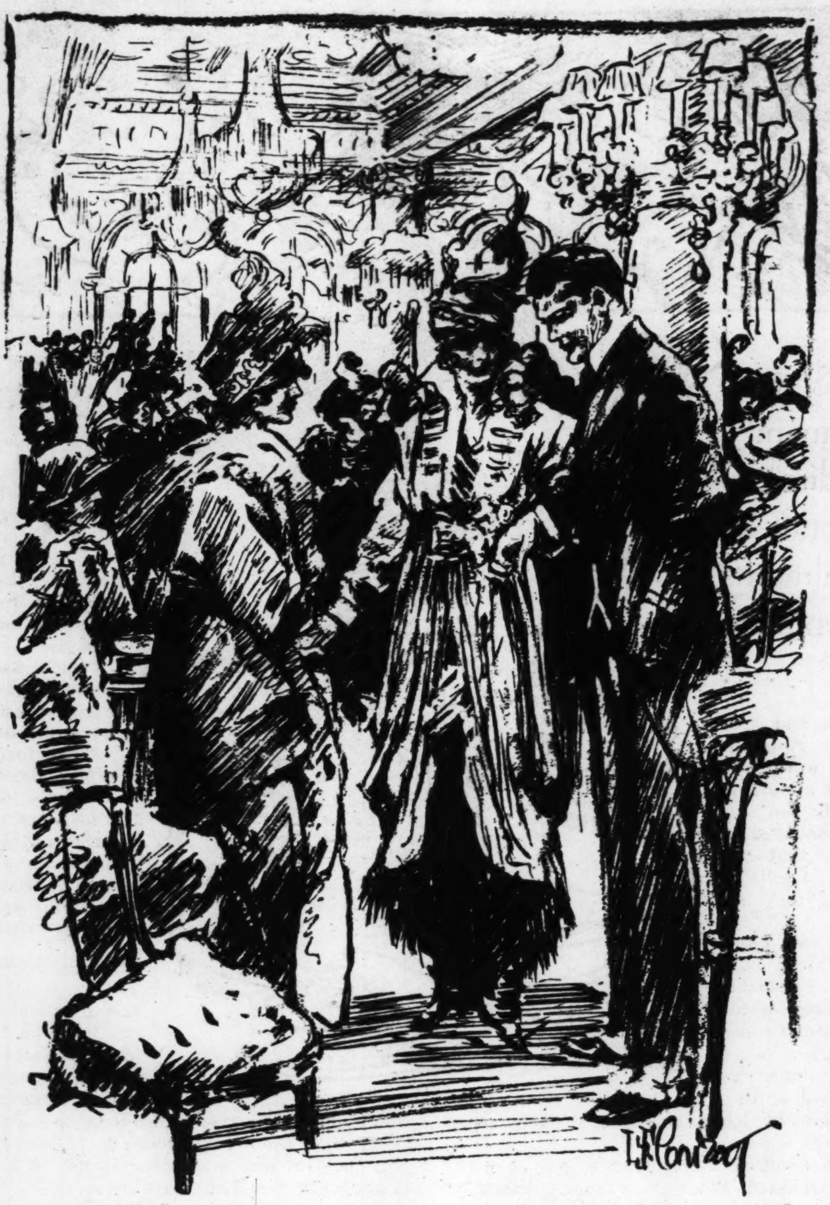
THE PERIL OF THE OFFICIAL INTRODUCER

Tango Teas the grazing ground of blackmailers who, introduced to idle daughters and wives of wealthy men, demand money for suppressing the truth or lies that they concoct



"The official introducer presents a concave man."

ONE of the menaces of the cheap dance hall, often inveighed against by clergymen and moralists, is the presence of an official whose function it is to find partners for unattached young women, almost invariably from among young men with whom they have not the slightest acquaintance.

Amazing to state, this custom has now extended to the most gilded temples of the dance in New York—the very fashionable hotels—where a new type of woman, called the Official Introducer, will present without question any young man, whose clothes and manner meet her approval, to the wealthy and idle women, infatuated with the modern dances, who every afternoon throng the costly "thes dansant."

It is a national boast that in the United States we have no men of leisure, such as were found in London or Paris or Berlin before the war. Most of our men are at business until long after the thes dansant hours. Where do they come from, then, these idle dancing men who are welcomed as partners by bored and jaded women of fortune, but whom they would never meet socially in their own homes? Thereby hangs a tale of astounding indiscretion on the part of the women, and also of not infrequent blackmail on the part of the men.

The entire story is told by a Post-Dispatch writer who, with a man companion, made the rounds of the various "palais" dedicated to Terpsichore.

By Stuart Clyde

DESPITE her foreign reputation for unconventionality, the average New York woman of social standing is a stern stickler for the conventions. Travelers familiar with Paris, London, Vienna and Berlin will tell you that even the frivolous women here do not flirt in an open, conspicuous way. It is harder to make chance acquaintances in Manhattan that in any other great world city.

Then how do the general run of male frequenters of the tea dances contrive introductions to the women of standing upon whom they not seldom prey? How is the gap bridged? The key to the method lies in an obscure and deftly worded advertisement in a column that presumably is read by a large number of women. It reads:

> "An interesting feature of the dancing will be the presence of number of young women who, at the discretion of Mme. ——, will be introduced to men looking for partners."

This simple offer of hospitality occurred in a reference to the matinee dances of one of New York's large and luxurious hotels. Unquestionably it was made with the knowledge of the management, doubtless in accordance with a prevailing custom.

Now let us begin our round of the tango teas. It is 5 o'clock of a perfect fall day. Motor cars and taxicabs are buzzing along Fifth Avenue and Broadway, many of them filled with women gowned and bonneted in the latest modes. Following to one of the focal points of this procession, we find the machines piling up in front of a garish Broadway entrance. Their feminine cargoes trip through the hotel's deserted dining room, enter an elevator and stream into a balcony room.

The women, with few exceptions, are smartly dressed—of the luxurious, exotic type one sees at Palm Beach in February or at Atlantic City or Long Beach later. Many wear expensive jewelry. Everywhere their sparkling eyes glitter with vivid expectancy.

This Temple of the Dance, like most others of its kind, consists of a square of marble or highly polished hardwood, about which tables are grouped. The attendant servitors are waiters, whose duty it is to see that the libations of the worshipers are frequent and expensive. Tea is rare; highballs or fancy alcoholic drinks are everywhere, the fancier the better, because more costly.

As we pause to get our bearings, we cannot help noticing a tall, lissome blonde who stands near a pillar and gives us a subtle look of appraisal. She is wearing the very duplicate of a dress I saw on a fashionable woman this summer at the Ritz in Paris. Even a woman rival would have admitted her to be handsome. There was something impersonal in the quick, all-seeing inspection she gave us. Although we did not then know it, she was the Official Introducer, and approving us, had passed us into the inner gate.

All around us women are smoking cigarettes, their long and slender amber holders often showing delicate filagree decorations traced in gold. Everywhere women are drinking and laughing. Instinctively one takes the atmosphere, one apprehends the glances that are being directed toward the men—half-hidden glanc of invitation so evanescent that only the closest rvation detects them.

There is no flirting, mind—no advances. That would never do; but it isn't necessary, as you shall presently see!

The band strikes up "You're Here and I'm Here," a rollicking tune so changeful in its measures that one's feet automatically move to its gay rhythm. There was no quick rush to the dancing floor. Here as everywhere else, few care to be the first to begin.

"Go ahead and break the ice," is heard, and presently a pair respond to the urging of their acquaintances, whirling out onto the floor. In a twinkling partners stream from among the tables and the dance is on. We noted a number of women who were not dancing. They sat in silent disappointment, watching their more fortunate sisters.

The tall blonde suddenly appears. She does not rush, she does not bustle, she seems to swim through the air. She approaches a party of two women sitting at the table next to us. In her train are two young men; they are of the concave type, bending in at the waist.

"Oh, you're not dancing!" says the hostess in her sweetest tones. "What a pity. Let me introduce"——

Her voice dies away. She names no names! The girls—for they are certainly not more than 22 years old—look up with smiling eyes.

"May I ask you to"—— murmurs one man and before he has finished his sentence, if indeed he meant to waste words when his invitation is so obvious, one girl has sprung up eagerly and in another second is undulating in the mazes of the one-step.

"Dancing?" says the other man to the other girl, with a fine economy of expression, and they are off and away in a twinkling.

Already the Official Introducer has swum away with her graceful glide. It all has happened in a moment. Watch her as she moves from table to table. Here she pauses; there are a few words, and a girl nods an assent. The hostess looks over to a table where another concave man, who has been following her with his eyes, sits. Her imperative glance is a summons. In another second another girl has found a partner. And so she swims about, skillfully, deftly making known to each other in the simplest way those who would fulfill the heart's desire of the moment. For really one cannot dance without a partner, and it is an invariable rule that women are not permitted to waltz with each other.

My companion has been watching with wide-open eyes. He is a cosmopolite; for years he has spent his summers abroad, visiting the great capitals and, being a theatrical manager, every winter he travels all over the United States.

"This is certainly a new one on me," he exclaimed under his breath. "Why, I never saw anything like it before! What can these women, these girls be thinking of? Who are these men? Gentlemen, apparently, on the surface; but what do they know of their character or of their private life? What is their occupation that permits them to dawdle away their afternoons in such places as these? Abroad we know there is a numerous leisure class, but there are comparatively only a few men in this country who spend their lives in the pursuit of pleasure."

Place after place we visited in the course of a week. These dance teas are everywhere in this great city—all prosperous, all charging three to five times the usual price for liquids and condiments, even where it costs at least $1.50 for admission alone. In nearly every place there is a "Hostess;" invariably a woman as notable for tact and her special kind of worldly wisdom as the one we first observed.

By this time we have "bridged the gap" and are plunged into the whirlpool of gayety. We were not known to any of the Official Introducers, but my tactful companion quickly discovered the "open sesame" in each place to their acquaintance. The rest was easy. Need one say more? It is sufficient that we never lacked partners.

So far you have a rough sketch, the exterior surfaces and the high lights of these novel afternoon spectacles. Now it is the time to draw the curtain and reveal the inner and for the most part hidden phases of these tango teas.

We were some time in assembling the facts. Perhaps we should never have gained a complete realization of the shady side of all the pomp and glitter we had assisted at but for the revelations of an habitue who happened to be an old acquaintance of my friend. This was a woman of a type sufficiently familiar in this metropolis, the wife of a man much older than herself, immersed in business, who indulges her every whim and lavishly supplies her with pin money. She is handsome, invariably wears expensive and beautiful gowns, has a motor, is childless, of course, lives on Riverside Drive—"The Drive" is the correct term in her set—invariably breakfasts in bed, and her mornings are devoted to the fiction of Robert Chambers.

It was Mrs. "Riverside Drive" who really lifted the curtain and took us behind the scenes. Her revelations were not told at one sitting but came to us bit by bit between dances during several afternoons. The easiest way to tell the story is to make it her own narrative, though you will understand it did not come to me in this form but was drawn out by my curious questionings.

What she says is true, for, personally, I have verified all essential details.

"I am personally aware of five blackmailing cases which have grown out of promiscuous introductions at tango teas," said "Mrs. Riverside Drive." "There has been gossip about many more. How true are the stories about the others I cannot say, but there must be some fire where there is so much smoke.

"Yes, I'll admit the Official Introducer system has its dangers. All that the hostess looks out for is the appearance of the man. As long as he wears good clothes and dances well she is satisfied. She presents him to the woman who has come to the establishment to tango or hesitate and there her responsibility ends. She assumes the lady can take care of herself. I can, and most of my friends, too, but a good many others lack our wisdom and experience. We ask 'Does he dance well?' not 'Who is he?' and we go no

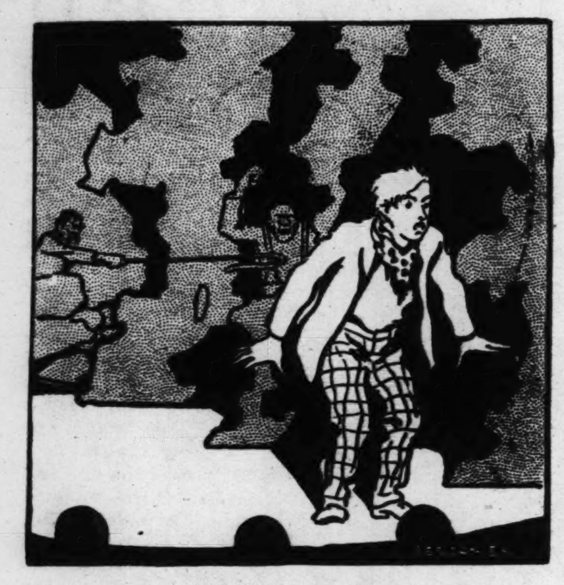
STAGE STORIES BY NAT GOODWIN

A faro game the basis of his first financial success—Earliest dramatic triumph leads to his first theatrical disaster—Anecdotes of Stuart Robson, William Warren and critical estimates of famous actors.



"I seemed paralyzed and could not stir."

WHENEVER Nat Goodwin isn't talking about his matrimonial adventures in his memoirs, just published, he is delightfully interesting. He is interesting, of course, when he gives details of his marriages to five beautiful women, but not always delightfully so. It's a different matter when he is merely giving his recollections of more than 40 years of the American stage. Then his story sparkles with wit and glows with good humor. It is flavored with pertinent anecdote. It gives friendly, intimate and hitherto unpublished recollections of men and women who have entertained the American public for considerably more than half a century. Once in a great while, a bit of bad temper intrudes—how could it be otherwise with the temperamental Goodwin?—and it only serves to make the superabundance of lovableness and cordiality the more welcome. "Nat Goodwin's Book" (Badger), probably will endure as a catalog of the human in many of the country's most noted players.

The work begins, as did the author's career, with a commencement day of the Little Blue Academy of old Farmington College, Maine, on a bright morning in June. Some of the graduates were to deliver orations and there was to be a contest for a prize in elocution. Let the book tell it:

> Many had spoken their parts and the rafters and roof had given back the approving shouts in echoes almost as resounding as the words themselves. At length my name was announced by our preceptor and worthy master, Mr. Alden J. Blethen, the present manager and editor of the Seattle Times.
> With some timidity, but tremendous eagerness, I mounted the improvised rostrum and began my recitation of a poem called "The Uncle." As I began my eyes seemed to be swimming back and forth in my head. I saw nothing but birds floating into space. Then a death-like silence ensued and images usurped the place of the birds. They assumed forms and through the mists came men and women and one by one they seemed to come before my vision until the room was filled. I finished, I thought, in a hush and was utterly oblivious to the great burst of applause which greeted my efforts. My seatmate, poor Charlie Thomas, who in after years was associated with Charles Hoyt, the writer and producer of many successful farce comedies, grabbed me by the arm and hurled me back on the stage, whispering "Give them that Macbeth speech!" Mechanically I acted upon his suggestion and began the soliloquy. I remembered nothing more until we left the hall. In fact I was in a comatose state until summoned that evening by Mr. Blethen to come into his library where, in the presence of the other scholars, I was presented with a set of Shakspeare's complete works. As I went to my room that night I began to dream of the life to come. I saw myself startling the world as King Lear.
>
> Two days after I received the first newspaper criticism of my work from the Portland papers. The notices pleased me beyond words and brought more joy to my young heart than any I ever received in after life. With pardonable pride, I trust, I set one forth here:
>
> "The little Academy had never known the delirium of applause until a slight, delicate youth, with peculiar flaxen hair, round blue eyes and a complexion as fair as a girl's, mounted the rostrum and spoke his lines. Such elocution must have awakened unusual interest, and so easy was the speaker, so perfect his actions and charming his intelligence, that the old dormitory shook with plaudits."

From the moment he read that criticism it was all off with Nat. A stage career became his sole ambition that would not be throttled. His father tried to make of him a clerk in a Boston dry goods store. He undertook the job; but spent so much of his spare time hanging around the back doors of theaters just to get a glimpse of great players, and got so full of dramatic themes that he couldn't keep track of the cost and selling prices of lingerie. The store fired him, which was about the best day's work that store ever did for itself, for Goodwin and for the American public.

About that time Nat's mother gave up a suite in her Boston home to Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Thorne Sr., parents of Charles, Edwin and William Thorne. They had the entree into every "first night" and frequently took Nat with them, to the boy's infinite delight. Finally through the intercession of William Thorne he got a chance to appear on the stage at Providence in a minor part. Here is how Nat describes his first venture:

> I was the bad young man of the play, seeking to bring about the downfall of the soubrette. I was supposed to have endeavored to embrace her down the road, she to have eluded my advances and broken away, rushing onto the stage, I following. Naturally she had not rehearsed all she intended to do that evening and while I was quietly talking to her in the entrance, the cue was given and she uttered a fearful shriek. I didn't know what had happened and looked around for the cause. Then I found she was in the center of the stage, beckoning me to come on and finish the scene that was supposed to have started down the road.
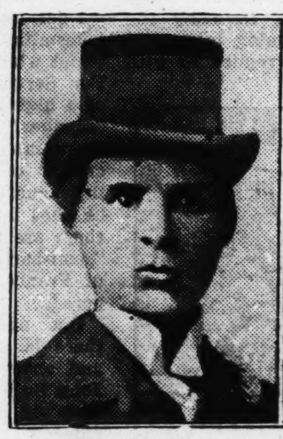
> Somebody shoved me on. The orchestra played chilly music, suggestive of my base intentions. This took every line out of my head, and I simply stood there and gasped. The young lady contemplated me for a moment and cried "You shall not!" Then she rushed off, leaving me transfixed. From each side of the stage I could hear "Come off! Come off!" But I seemed paralyzed and could not stir. At last the lights went out, the scene was changed and when I came to I found myself in the property room with two or three gentlemen in red flannel shirts throwing water into my face.

He caught the first train for Boston and gave way to despair. His mother talked him out of it finally and, just at the right time he became acquainted with Stuart Robson, whom he met at a theatrical rehearsal through the influence of Joseph Bradford, a noted playwright. Bradford had been amazed at Goodwin's imitations of famous actors and also by Goodwin's remarkable personal resemblance to Robert Craig, actor, playwright and mimic, who had been a great friend of Robson. When Robson—called in the book "the best Shakspearean clown of modern times"—saw Goodwin, the resemblance to Craig overwhelmed him. He sat in a box and watched the boy go through his stunts. Before he left the rehersal Goodwin had been engaged for a part in Robson's play.



STUART ROBSON,

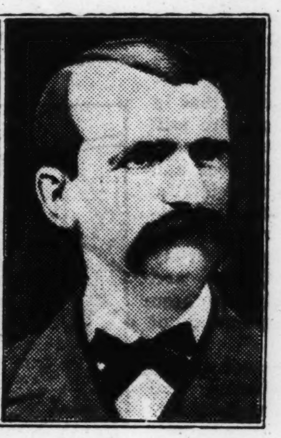
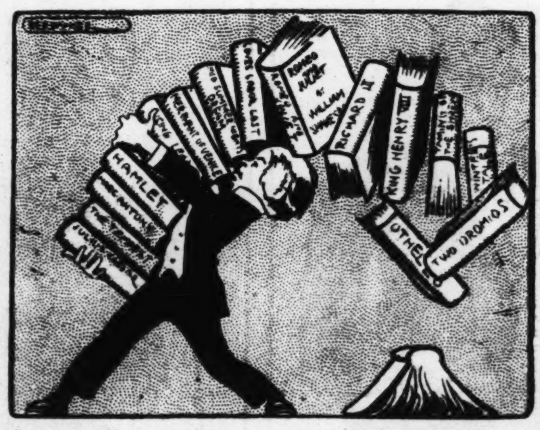
WILLIAM WARREN,
"The greatest comedian that ever lived."

TONY HART,
"He had the face of an Irish Apollo."



JACK HAVERLY,
"The man who conceived the syndicate."

As part of his work he was required to give the imitations. The audience was so pleased that it made vociferous demands for an imitation of Robson. Goodwin refused and ran off stage. The crowd kept yelling "Robson." Finally Robson told the boy to "go back and give the villain's hell." He went on and repeated a scene Robson and another had just finished, changing his voice from Robson's squeak to the other man's bass as the roles demanded. The applause was so deafening that Robson was compelled to lead Goodwin before the curtain for a bow. After the performance Robson said to him:



"I was presented with a set of Shakspeare's complete works."

"Young Goodwin, you have done two things tonight that I shall never forget—halted the performance of a very good play and given a very bad imitation of me. I could have done it better myself."

From that time on Goodwin's career led him successfully from vaudeville and burlesque to the legitimate, to the rank of star of the first magnitude and to the position of producer, bringing him fortune as well as fame. Even chance favored him at one time when he appeared to have come to an impasse.

It was after his marriage to Eliza Weathersby. At the beginning of one of their seasons they had made such a financial success that Goodwin offered Benjamin Wolfe $1000, on delivery of the manuscript, of a new play. The manuscript came C. O. D. at a time when the Goodwin purse was empty and things looked very black indeed. In despair Nat hunted up two friends, one a Judge and one a gambler. They were in financial straits but, between them, dug up $100 and gave him the money.

"My gambler friend," says Goodwin, "suggested that I take the hundred dollars, go upstairs into a faro game in which he had a slight interest and try to win out. I reasoned that the hundred was of no use to me and determined to take a chance. I went into the gambling room and bet the hundred on the high card. It won. I let it stay and it won again, giving me $400. I asked for a chair and then sat down. In ten minutes I had $1150. I immediately returned the hundred dollar loan, bought Eliza a bunch of lilacs, her favorite flower, went to the express office and returned home with the much coveted manuscript."

The play was "Hobbies" and proved the first big success of Goodwin's career. He and his wife appeared in it for four years and it netted them a fortune. And all because a dealer happened to put a certain card on one stack instead of another!

Theater goers will probably derive more pleasures out of Goodwin's reminiscences of famous players than out of any other part of the book. He declares his first great idol was William Warren, whom he dubs "the greatest comedian that ever lived." When he was a boy in Boston his first moment of bliss was when Warren's hat blew off as he was riding through a street and Goodwin was enabled to recover it and return it to the actor.

Goodwin was also tremendously fond of Stuart Robson. He tells many interesting anecdotes of this great player, whose squeaky voice has delighted thousands. Once Robson in a moment of jest promised his coachman $5000 if he won the heart and hand of a certain lady. Six years later the coachman triumphantly led the lady to the altar and reminded Robson of the promise. Robson immediately sent him a check for $4,999, deducting $1 for an advance he made at the time of the original promise. Immediately afterwards Robson disappeared.

"His daughter and I finally located him," Goodwin relates, "with a few convivial friends in the hotel bar at Hingham. He quietly called us to one side and asked the daughter if she had delivered the check. She answered: 'Yes, papa, I gave him the check.' Rob asked, 'How did he take it?' His daughter replied: 'Papa, he cried.' 'How long did he cry?' asked Rob. 'About a minute,' she replied. 'That's nothing,' said Rob, 'when I signed it I cried an hour.'

Of Sir Henry Irving, Goodwin says, he thinks the great English player had a wider knowledge than any man he ever met in the theatrical world. Irving was famed for a certain dry wit. One time a bore declared he was so weary of the world that he'd like to live in a shack on a desert island. "Why not try one of the Scilly Islands?" Irving retorted.

Maurice Barrymore, Goodwin classifies as the most effulgent man he ever met, a man with a brain that scintillated sparks of wit that Charles Lamb or Byron might envy. Barrymore had produced a sex play in Hammerstein's theater in which the acoustics were very poor. When Lackaye denounced the play as gross and immoral, Barrymore quietly remarked: "But you fail to realize, my dear Lackaye, that Hammerstein's is a theater where one may be obscene and not heard."

While expressing the greatest love for Joseph Jefferson, Goodwin laments that his career had accomplished nothing worth while for the drama; that Jefferson never produced an original play, built or leased a theater, or created a character. "Irving," says Goodwin, "who died almost penniless and who invested thousands of dollars in an earnest endeavor to uphold the drama, Lawrence Barrett and dear Edwin Booth, who lost a million in erecting a temple of art, only to see his name chiseled out by a dry goods estalishment—these were truly great men."

Peter Dailey, whom he calls a "sunny son of sometime," was very close to Goodwin's heart. He pays high tribute to Dailey's memory. He speaks very kindly also of Charlie Hoyt although they once had a serious quarrel. One night Hoyt had two tickets to Goodwin's "Nathan Hale," and begged a friend to accompany him. The friend refused and, when pressed for a reason, declared he didn't like Goodwin. "Well, come along," said Hoyt. "You are sure to enjoy this play for they hang Nat in the last act."

The author tells an amusing anecdote of Charles Thorne Sr. and Charles Thorne Jr. when they were playing a Scotch drama, "Roderick Dhu," at Niblo's garden in New York. Business had been bad and the production was almost on the rocks. Father and son had a powerful scene ending an act, in which the old gentleman said

ONE is so prone to think of Germany as straining every nerve of its national being to cope with its mighty foes on either side, that for a moment there is surprise to find, in periodicals just arriving in St. Louis, that in this beleaguered nation editors are still writing copiously, illustrators are making their drawings by the hundreds and that particularly, in the hours of terrific stress, there is an unprecedented outburst of humor—much of it rough, to be sure, and rather of the "gallows" variety—expressed in endless verse, prose and cartoons. Yet, such could only have been expected from the boundless energy of the German race.

German humor is, of course, not American humor. It is more elaborate and heavy—and also now that the nation is at war and is animated with bitter hatreds—at times cruder and more brutal than American taste would welcome. As an example of the jest panderous there is this from the Meggendorfer-Blaetter:

"As in all other occupations, the English wish to drive the Germans from the field in the toy industry and particularly in the manufacture of dolls. By Christmas at the latest, it is said, it will be possible to buy strictly British dolls, whereas formerly only German dolls could be obtained. But another difficulty has arisen; they can get no eyes for the dolls. With sorrow it is admitted that no one in England knows the first thing about making glass eyes."

After this solemn preparation, now comes the point of the joke, which perhaps does not seem worth the trouble:

"The English may be at ease. We can offer them the firmest assurance that in a very short time they will be making eyes enough."

The German satirists have much of their best fun at the expense of the exaggerated bulletins of victory with which the allies flooded the world during the first few weeks of the war. Simplicissimus has run a series of cartoons called "English-French News," illustrating items purporting to have been taken from French, English and Russian newspapers.

"By a desperate advance the Russians captured a German flag at Libau," is attributed to Le Matin. The cartoonist pictures a burly Cossack robbing a child of a tiny flag, stuck in a toy sand fort on the seashore.

A London Times anouncement that "England is mustering a mighty continental expeditionary corps," is illustrated by a group of naked African savages, with spears and shields. A London Daily Mail statement that "In Germany the country people are streaming in a wild panic into the cities," is replied to with a drawing of rustics pouring into a city—to enlist! A more ghastly humor satirizes an announcement in Le Figaro that "French snipers hold possession of the telegraph lines." In the drawing the snipers "possess" the lines through being strung by the neck from the tops of the telegraph poles.

The national temper towards Germany's various foes is faithfully reflected by the jokesmiths. For France there is a contempt which is not altogether ill-natured. For Servia there is the serene disdain of a highly civilized people for a race of "savages," as when Servian prisoners are represented as exclaiming against the cruelty of Austria upon learning that their guards are not taking them out to be shot but to be bathed. For Russia, there are many sneers on the subject of "semi-barbarians," but, as in the case of France, they are not always ill-tempered.

But against England, the arch-foe, there is an outburst of rage, contempt and envy almost vitriolic in its fervor. John Bull is represented as a plump, profane old hypocrite or as a lanky scarecrow in khaki, who is almost always taking to his heels in wild terror of heroic Teutons in helmets.

Meggendorfer-Blaetter represents three prisoners, Dimitri Fuselowitsch, Jean Coqueliquot and Bob Beefeater, as regaling themselves from a flask which the Russian had hidden in his clothes. "Of course," says the writer, "had the flask belonged to Bob Beefeater, the two others would naturally have got nothing."

One last drink remains, and it is decided to give it to that one of the three who can tell the biggest lie. Dimitri relates that at mobilization the Russian soldiers found themselves with twice as much equipment as was necessary, because the Government officials had emptied their own pockets to supply more than had been ordered. One General gave 10,000 rubles to buy fodder for the cattle—9980 rubles representing his savings for 20 years, and the rest obtained by selling his watch chain.

Bob Beefeater exclaims in envy of this fabrication, but Jean tells that his single capture cost the Germans 12 army corps. Six of them attacked him at once. One corps he shot down with his rifle, another he put to the saber, another he strangled with his right hand, the fourth he smashed to bits with his left fist, the fifth he trampled beneath his right foot and the sixth he kicked so high in the air with his left foot that it never came down. Six other corps met the same fate. Then 10 42-centimeter guns bombarded him for two hours, while a Zeppelin shelled him from above and a submarine from beneath. At last he fell unconscious and was taken. The Kaiser, learning of the catastrophe, wept, and said to his General Staff: "If we capture three more such heroes as Jean Coqueliquot, we are ruined, gentlemen."

It is Dimitri's turn to swear jealously over the excellence of this lie, but Bob Beefeater shakes his head and says: "Gentlemen, I cannot compete with you. I am an Englishman, and an Englishman, upon my word of honor, never permits a lie to pass his lips."

England is represented as mobilizing all of the gorillas in Africa against Germany. A Basuto who, "for love of culture," wishes to smash the Germans with rocks, is told by John Bull it is better to fight as he does—with poisoned weapons. England's ally, Japan, is pictured as a cur snapping at Germany's heels, to be disposed of with a kick. Kladderadatsch relates:

"The Corriere della Sera brings the news that South African tribes are on the way to the theater of war. It is fitting that the Hottentots should reinforce Great Britain.

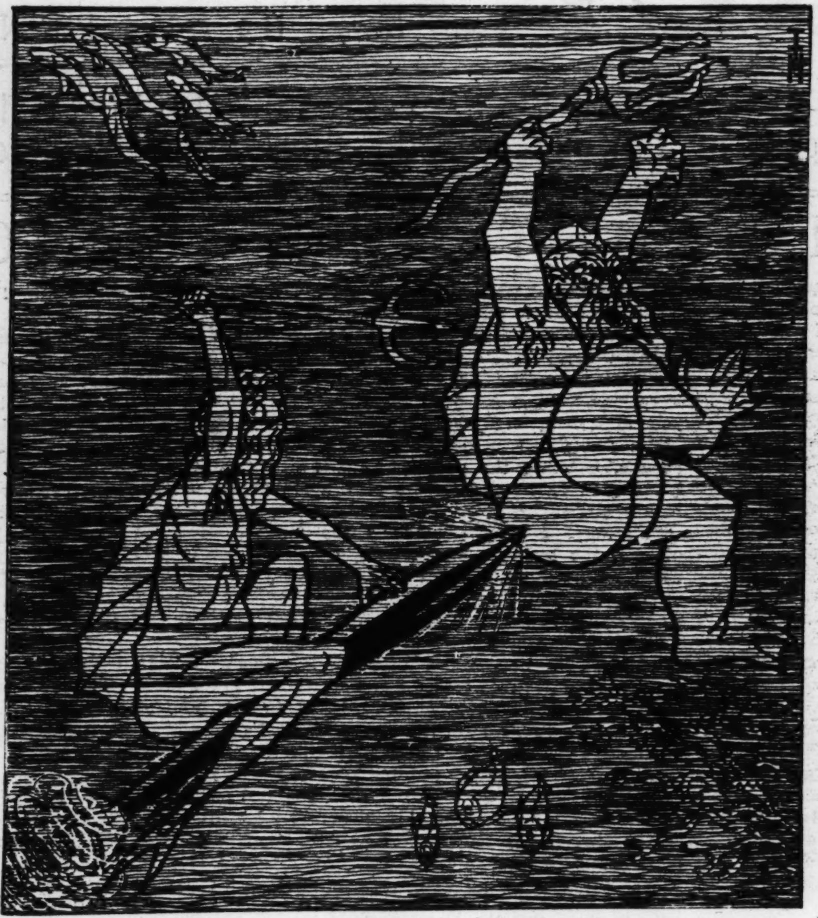
"But after they heard the French and English dum-dum firing, the crimes of the Belgians against wounded and physicians, and of the Russians against women and children, the Hottentots changed their minds. 'No,' said they, 'the English, French and Russians are too uncivilized for us.'"

However, it is the same Kladderadatsch which strikes, with excellent irony, a note of fairness in reply to a question by Max Reinhardt, the famous Berlin theater magnate, as to whether Shakspeare, being an Englishman, should henceforth be played in German theaters. The comic paper counters with the query: "Can the law of gravitation of the English Newton still remain valid for Germans?"

Several purported interviews on the subject are given. Burgomaster Preike says: "I believe that Newton's law of gravitation, about which I have never been able to understand a word, is nothing more than a piece of common English humbug." Oberlandesgerichtssekretaer Meier opines; "It is a shame worthy of apes that we have so long submitted to a law of gravitation." Sophmore Noltenkopf predicts that the Germans, on reaching London, will dictate to the English a new law of gravitation.

Lieut. Shackleton's expedition to the South Pole is declared to be a desperate attempt, as a last resort, to outflank Gen. von Kluck. The Prince of Wales, after assuring himself that his military wardrobe cannot possibly be ready for six months, immediately demands to go to the front, knowing he cannot without his royal furnishings. For this gallantry King George decorates the heir apparent with the Order of the Garter. The Germans complacently draw the contrast of the Kaiser's six sons at the front.

Many jests appear concerning the retirement of the French Government to Bordeaux when the Germans were at the gates of Paris. President Poincare, precipitately boarding a train, is saying: "Goodby, Parisians, write me now and then how everything goes." The Eiffel Tower is pictured as running away on four gigantic legs. Resentment against the French, as well as the English, for injecting native troops into a "white man's war" is illustrated in this anecdote:



THE GERMAN AND THE BRITISH NEPTUNES—"Heavens, what are you about? And I've been considered unconquerable for a hundred years of peace." —War Supplement of Simplicissimus.

"Upon the suggestion of Clemenceau, the celebrated philanthropist, that the German wounded should not receive the same care as the French wounded, he has received a telegram of hearty congratulation from the chief of a cannibal tribe in the French colonies. It closes with the words: 'Yours for culture, Jumbo.'"

A German comic paper states that an inspired citizen in West Prussia has named his newly born daughter Anna Belgiana Namura. For his next daughter, it continues, he is understood to have in readiness the names Antwerpina, Ostenderle, Bordereauxra and Pariadne, and for his next son Londonatello, Moscowgust, Rigabriel and Petrogradolph.

The Russian newspaper Wopnik, says Kladderadatsch, celebrates the tranquility which everywhere obtains in Russia: criminality is said to have fallen 70 per cent below previous figures. "Yes, yes," the German journal represents a Russian military officer as saying, "such is war. At present there is too sharp a watch; we can't steal a kopek any more. Great Heaven, what distress!"

Much derision is expended against the Czar's proclamation to his "beloved Jews." In one cartoon a German reservist is speaking to two rabbis in Suwalki, and saying: "Now, Moses, I'm just writing a line to the Czar of Russia: may I give him a greeting from his 'beloved Jews?'" The Hebrews, in the picture, are laughing uproariously at the jest.

The Indian chieftain, Black Raven, who, according to a purported dispatch from Montreal, has offered the aid of his tribe to England, is represented as writing to Lord Kitchener:

"My young men are aflame to mix things with the accursed Germans, and my squaws are busily preparing poison for the arrows which we intend to shoot into their bones; but it strikes me as remarkable, in view of our offer of aid, that you have rejected as inopportune and contrary to the dignity of the British name our plan to scalp certain of the enemy's army officers. Haven't the English palefaces, in all of their colonial wars, pulled the wool over the eyes of their enemies?

"On the other hand, will your Lordship kindly excuse us from shooting with dum-dum bullets? This is contrary to our views concerning fair play. We cannot so lightly permit our good reputation in Europe to be made game of, and must therefore decline this barbarous method of conducting war. Your very respectful colleague," etc.

One joke-carpenter says that the question of cleanliness in the army is a pressing one, as sufficient water for washing is not often obtainable. But, he continues, in this respect the allies have the advantage of the Germans. "Is it not true," he asks with elephantine facetiousness, "that all of the enemy's plans of attack have turned to water?"

Karlchen Mieszinck, a school boy, reflects the spirit of many American jokes of a similar nature in complaining that every day during the war he must unlearn something which he had previously had great trouble to absorb, especially in geography, "which was already a science difficult enough." He is so confused that he now believes Nuremberg to be in California, Leipsic in Chile, Karlsruhe in the Atlantic coast of the United States, Emden in India, Koenigsberg at Dar-es-salam and Breslau in the Dardanelles.

On the other hand, the more serious journals, like those in London, abound in stories of pathos and heroism. For instance, this from Ueber Land und Meer:

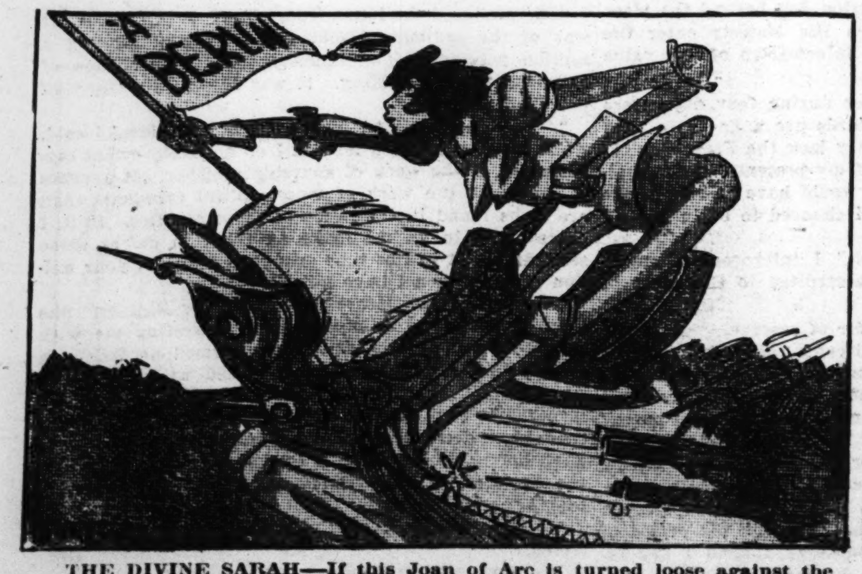
"Great are the sacrifices in this war, and death has not scrupled to lay his hand even upon the shoulders of German princes, who, young and blooming, scarcely grown out of their boyhood, know how to bleed and die as well as their comrades. Two sons of the Kaiser bear honorable wounds, and how well did the youthful Ernst Ludwig of Meiningen know how to die! Smilingly he received the merciless bullet, and as a Samaritan pressed a drink of water to his burning lips, he gave the helpful man a note, and then silently and composedly took his farewell from life.

"The note spoke of love and kindness and soldierly honor, and then said: 'If I should fall upon the field of honor for the greatness of Germany, do not place me in my princely tomb, but bury me in the common grave of my brave comrades in war. Greet the Emperor from me!'

"It is like soft music between heaven nad earth. Thus all know how to die, children of Kings and children of citizens. Heroes both in the sight of death! The head bows before them, and the eyes are dim with tears restrained. But no weakheartedness! For this there is neither time nor space. Danger is relentlessly striding down upon us!"

Another passage from the same article frankly declares that the religious sympathy of Islam is on the side of Germany, and hints at the imminence of a "Holy War.":

"The sand drifts about the Pyramids, and behind this dusky cloud the flag of the Prophet is secretly unfolding. Before the holy Kaaba at Mecca kneel earnest white forms. Their hands are crossed upon their breasts. Their brows touch the glowing stone—they are praying. They pray for the triumph of the German arms."



THE DIVINE SARAH—If this Joan of Arc is turned loose against the German army as a last resource, then tremble, Germania! (News note: Sarah Bernhard is said to have swooned from joy when she heard that the French banner again waved over Alsace.)

THE SHARKS IN JOHN BULL'S CARP POND.

By ALLEN UPWARD

An old Ambassador's revelations of underground diplomacy and political intrigue in famous episodes heretofore cloaked in mystery

II. A STOLEN KING.

"IT is a pity," remarked the Ambassador to me, as we sat sipping His Excellency's very choice cognac after dinner, "that there is no one who can write the secret history of Europe for the last few decades."

"Is there a secret history to write, then?" I asked, with an inflection which did not escape the keen ears of my host.

He removed the stump of his Larranaga from his lips and laid his head back to let a cloud of gray smoke escape towards the ceiling before he replied:

"Without doubt. It seems only the other day that, after more than 20 years' silence, Prince von Bismarck let the world into the secret of his telegram which precipitated the Franco-German War. Contemporary history is full of similar episodes, which never find their way to the ears of that good Baron Reuter. Rest assured," continued His Excellency with severity, "that the blatant dogmatism of the European press on these subjects is only equaled by its truly pathetic ignorance."

"But, M. l'Ambassadeur,"—we were in Paris—"surely it is impossible for any event of real importance to remain concealed? A mere telegram is different!"

"Not in the least, my dear sir. I will give you an instance." The Ambassador gazed thoughtfully for a few moments at the thin blue smoke line twisting and writhing itself out of the burning heart of the cigar stump between his fingers. "You remember that supposed illness long ago of the King of Spain, then but a child?"

"Why, perfectly. But what do you mean by supposed?"

"Merely this, that his young Majesty was no more ill at that time than you and I are at this hour. The whole of the accounts given to the public were an elaborate fiction, designed to cloak a state of things which, had the truth become known, would have shaken the kingdom to its center. Alfonso XIII had been stolen!"

"The difficulty I have in telling you this story arises from the fact that I myself happened, by the force of circumstances, to take a prominent part in the discovery. I fear that this accident may impart to my account of the episode a flavor of egotism which is disagreeable to me. You shake your head, but I assure you the danger is a real one.

"It was several years ago, as you will recollect, that the press of Europe was filled with reports of a mysterious illness from which this young monarch was said to be suffering. This malady was described as being of a highly infectious character, though not exactly dangerous. At the same time the world was called upon to admire the maternal solicitude of the Queen Regent, who, it was said, in order to nurse her son, had shut herself up in his apartments, with only two attendants, refraining from all intercourse with the rest of the palace while the critical period lasted. The only other persons who were permitted to have access to the sickroom, besides the physician in attendance, were Father Oliva, the King's tutor, the Senor Guastala, at that time Prime Minister of Spain.

"In the meantime, what had really happened was this:

"On the day before these reports began to appear—which was, I think, a Monday—a grand review of the troops forming the Madrid garrison was to come off in the city park. The review was in honor of Saint Jago, the patron saint of Spain, and it had been publicly announced that the young King would be present, together with his mother, the Queen Regent. It was, in effect, to be an imposing celebration, and all Madrid was expected to be there. On the very morning of the review, however, a letter came to the palace, addressed to Her Majesty, and marked urgent. On being opened this letter was found to contain the alarming intelligence that there was a plot on foot to attempt the King's life. The anonymous writer went on to add that the conspirators hoped to carry out their design during His Majesty's presence at the review.

"This letter bore the postmark of Pamplona.

"I see that that name produces the same effect on your mind as it did on the Queen's. Pamplona is, of course, the center of the Carlist region, and the ancient stronghold of the party. It is well known that the hopes of the legitimists had greatly revived on the death of Alfonso XII without a male heir, and though their schemes received a check by the posthumous birth of the present King, the pretensions of Don Carlos to the throne have remained a standing menace to the modern dynasty. Nevertheless—but it is best that I should relate the facts without comment.

"Her Majesty showed this letter to Father Oliva, in whom she reposed great confidence; and, as was natural, they decided to keep the King at home, giving out as a pretext that he was unwell. The Regent accordingly set out to the review without him, taking, instead, his elder sister, the Princess of Asturias. Alfonso was greatly disappointed, but they succeeded in pacifying him by the promise of a huge box of lead soldiers, a toy which has always given him supreme delight.

"As soon as the Queen was gone, Father Oliva took the King into his study, and commenced to give him his lessons as usual. An hour passed in this way.

"At the end of this time a closed carriage drove up at a furious rate to the principal entrance of the palace, and there alighted a person in the uniform of a general officer, attended by an aid-de-camp. This personage, who appeared to labor under considerable excitement, announced himself to the porters in waiting as Gen. Espinosa. He stated that he had been sent by the Regent to fetch the King to the review, and de- [illegible] Majesty's

"One of the other two [illegible] to speak. I turned a penetrating look on him.

"'Now you remind me, senor,' he said, respectfully, to fill himself another glass of cognac. I took advantage of the opening to put a question.

"Excuse me, but was there a Gen. Espinosa in the Spanish army?"

"There was; but he was at this time stationed in Barcelona. Command your impatience till the end, and you shall hear everything."

His Excellency uttered these words with an air of rebuke, twisting the points of his white mustache in his fingers as he spoke. He took a sip at his cognac before proceeding:

"Thoroughly overwhelmed by the manner of these officers, the lackeys hastened to conduct them to the room where the tutor and pupil were at work. Here, as soon as the servants had withdrawn, the General repeated his statements, adding to Father Oliva that the troops had shown grave symptoms of dissatisfaction at the King's absence, and that serious consequences were apprehended if he were not immediately forthcoming.

"You can well understand that in Spain, the land of pronunciamentos, where the army has so long been accustomed to regard itself as the master of the Government, and is always seething with sedition, such intelligence was not to be trifled with. The General's uniform and the presence of the aid lent an air of reality to the story; and, in short, the priest appears to have been completely taken off his guard.

"No doubt it would have been more prudent on his part to have insisted on accompanying his pupil. But the suddenness of these men's arrival, and the alarming character of their statements, deprived him of his usual presence of mind. He sent for the child's hat, and allowed him to depart with the emissaries. The King himself, it is needless to say of a mere boy, was only too eager to go. He is daring as a lion, and to him shyness is absolutely unknown.

"The next thing that happened was the return of the Queen Regent, at the close of the review. She sent to the tutor to bring Alfonso to her. Confounded at such a message, he hurried into Her Majesty's presence, and at once the truth was discovered. There had been no discontent among the troops, and no sending for the King. He had become the victim of a cleverly planned abduction.

"Figure to yourself the despair of Queen Christina, a woman who beneath her infernal Hapsburg pride, concealed the most tender affection for her children. I had the honor, sir, to be admitted into the circle of the royal nursery, and I found it difficult to believe that this charming and caressing parent was the same woman who had inspired the whole diplomatic body with awe at the public levees. The distress of the unfortunate tutor was not less pronounced. But even in such moments, royal personages are not freed from considerations of state. Before taking any steps, it was necessary to consult the Prime Minister.

"A messenger was at once dispatched to fetch him to the palace. Senor Gaustala lost no time in obeying the summons, and the facts were laid before him.

"It was by his imperative advice that it was decided to keep the affair secret as long as possible. In the unsettled state of the Spanish kingdom, with a dynasty hardly yet seated on the throne, and threatened by republicans on one side and legitimists on the other, the news that the King had been spirited away might very well be the signal, as you may imagine, for a revolution.

"It was therefore that this comedy of a pretended illness was devised. With the exception of two old, trusted servants, everyone was strictly excluded from the King's apartments, in which it was given out that he was lying ill, and Queen Christina arranged to take up her own quarters there, to escape the prying eyes of her suite. On his part, Senor Guastala undertook to bind one of the court physicians to secrecy, and induce him to attend at regular intervals, and issue the usual bulletins.

"At the same time the police were warned that an abduction had taken place, and furnished with a general description of the carriage, and of its three occupants. The railways were watched, the frontiers guarded, in short, the usual precautions were taken Unfortunately it was considered unsafe to describe the missing boy too plainly for fear of his identity becoming known.

"The porters who had seen the carriage drive away were also questioned with caution, but beyond the mere statement that they had seen His Majesty enter the carriage with the officers, no information of any value was elicited from them.

"The exertions of the police during four days were entirely fruitless. The Spaniards are a fine race with many admirable traits, but they lack the French quickness. But for the accident of my presence in the capital, it is difficult to say what would have become of the Spanish monarchy. Luckily I chanced to be in Madrid at that time."

"But, my dear Ambassador," I interposed, thoughtlessly, "you were not then accredited to the court of Spain!"

His Excellency put on an air of reserve.

"My friend, you are indiscreet. My presence in Madrid had no connection with politics. When I mention that a lady was concerned, you will perceive that it would be an indelicacy on my part to tell you more."

I hastened to apologize for the error of which I had been guilty. The Ambassador graciously dismissed my excuses with a wave of his hand, and resumed the tale.

"The moment I heard that the King had been taken ill, I went to call at the palace. During the period of my connection with our embassy in Madrid I had become greatly attached to this delightful youngster, with his [illegible] airs of a King; and I think I had had the [illegible] the regard of His Majesty. I went, [illegible] at each of these entrances, with instructions to allow no one, whatever welcomed by the little invalid. Judge my surprise when I found myself denied admittance to the sickroom. I came away, cursing the ingratitude of Princes.

"But you are aware of my character. I am not easily to be baffled in a design which I have once undertaken. That very day I telegraphed to Paris, to Emile Gerault et Cie., of the Rue Luxembourg, to forward me the most splendid toy in their warehouse.

"On the fourth day it arrived. It was a marvel—a work of art. Imagine a soldier, completely accoutered in the uniform of a Chasseur d'Afrique, with everything removable, down to the very spurs, and mounted upon a fascinating camel, which drove itself by clockwork! I packed my treasure in a cab and took it round instantly to the palace.

"As I had anticipated, I was again refused entrance into Alfonso's presence. Thereupon I demanded an audience of the Queen Regent. Daunted by my firmness, the attendants gave way, and consented to take my card to Her Majesty. I ventured to inscribe on it the word, 'Pressing.'

"Doubtless, in her immense grief, the Queen was ready to clutch at any straw which might promise assistance. She agreed to receive me in the room adjoining the King's bedchamber.

"You know those Hapsburgs. In the midst of her terrible sufferings Christina preserved the haughtiness of her family. She omitted to accord me the privilege of being seated.

"'What is it that you desire to see me about, M. le Baron?' she demanded, addressing me in the French language.

"'Madame," I replied in Spanish, of which language I am a master, 'I have come to crave permission to present myself to His Majesty. I do not in the least fear infection; and I am not without hope that my society may cheer the tedium of a sick bed.'

"I saw an embarrassed look pass over the Queen's face. She replied, however, without unbending in the least:

"'I regret that what you ask is impossible. The King is too ill to receive even the most intimate of his friends. On his recovery he shall be informed of your kind attentions.'

"'But, Your Majesty,' I remonstrated, 'see what I have just procured from Paris!' And I unfolded the wrappings and produced my chasseur on his adorable camel.

"'Surely the King is not too ill to be amused with this toy,' I ventured to add. 'I implore you to let me offer it to my young friend.'

"Queen Christina made no reply. I turned towards her, trembling, and was astonished to see tears in her fine eyes.

"'Pardon, madame, what have I done?' I exclaimed, in consternation.

"'You have done nothing, M. le Baron, that is not worthy of your admirable heart,' the Queen was good enough to answer. 'It would be ungrateful to keep up this deception with you any longer. Alfonso cannot receive your touching gift, because he is not in the palace. My son was kidnaped four days ago.'

"I was thunderstruck by this news. Her Majesty then invited me to be seated, and told me the whole of the circumstances, exactly as I have related them to you. As soon as the recital was finished I rose to my feet.

"'Madame,' I said, with impressiveness, 'leave this affair in my hands. Give me five days, and I undertake to recover my young playmate from the clutches of these assassins.'

"The Queen gazed at me as if afraid to hope.

"'You say so, M. le Baron? Why, have you any means of influence over the Carlists?'

"'Your Majesty is mistaken in supposing this to be the work of Carlists,' I answered, with pardonable warmth. 'I know Don Carlos personally; I have had the honor of dining at his table, and I can vouch for him as I would for myself. He is incapable of such a crime.'

"The Queen appeared to be puzzled.

"'But the warning received that very day—the letter from Pamplona?'

"Then perhaps you will attach important to this letter. Senor Gaustala received it yesterday. We considered it a mere blind.'

"She produced the letter from a desk as she spoke. It was of the ordinary blackmailing type, demanding a million pesetas and an indemnity as the condition of restoring the stolen King. It was signed. 'By Order of the Black Hand.'

"'There is something in this letter, doubtless,' I said, when I had considered it; 'but I do not believe that this abduction is the work of anarchists, either. It appears to me to be the work of more skillful criminals than are to be found in the ranks of those fanatics. Still, I entreat you to let me make an effort to defeat these scoundrels. It will be time enough to think of your million pesetas when I have failed.'

"My assurances appeared to satisfy Her Majesty. She then condescended to sign a paper investing me with full powers to take what steps I deemed necessary in the conduct of the affair, and, armed with this document, I took my leave.

"My first step was to invent a disguise. After much thought, I decided to assume the character of an English doctor. I procured a card and inscribed it with the name of Dr. Harry Brown of the Institute of Doctors, London."

"It should have been College of Physicians," I objected.

"That is like you English, with your insular egoism," [illegible] observed, sad[illegible] suppose that anyone in Madrid knew or cared whether your doctors called their building a college or an institute?"

I prudently refrained from replying to this challenge; and the Ambassador presently took another sip from his glass and went on:

"You ask yourself why I chose to become an English doctor. I will tell you. It is well known that there is a streak of insanity running through your nation, which renders them the most eccentric people in the world. As an Englishman it would excite no remark that I should take the extraordinary measures which I proposed to myself. I had observed this in connection with the extraordinary affair of the ruby of Bhurani, in which the late King of Holland was concerned—I will tell you about it another time. Moreover, as a doctor, I had an excuse for my presence in the palace. I could announce that I was investigating the cause of the King's attack.

"My next step was to interview Father Oliva, the tutor, a dreary man, who concealed the most intense stupidity under an appearance of great craft. I found him in the room from which Alfonso had been carried off. He had known me formerly, and exhibited much surprise on learning of my assumed character. I made him repeat to me the details of the abduction, and then asked to see the most recent photograph of his pupil.

"The father produced a handsome portrait, taken within the last few weeks. The King's face, as you are aware, is a very striking one. The features are noble and defiant, the eyes large and brilliant.

"'Has this portrait been widely circulated?' I asked. 'Is the man in the street familiar with it?'

"'Certainly,' the priest answered. 'It has figured in all the shop windows. The King's portraits are always very popular. There is scarcely a cabin in Spain where you will not see something, if it is only an almanac, with the likeness of Alfonso XIII.'

"'So much the better; it makes it all the more difficult for the conspirators to carry out their plans. It is incredible that they should have been able to carry him through the streets of the capital in broad daylight without recognition. I must see the servants who were present when the carriage drove off.'

"The father hesitated.

"'Are you not afraid of arousing their suspicions?' he asked. 'Remember that they suppose the King returned in safety.'

"I never permit myself to be discourteous to an ecclesiastic. As you know, I have no religion except France and my honor. But I respect the church. Priests, in my opinion, are a class whom it is cowardly to affront, and I was not willing to be rude to the good father. Nevertheless his remark annoyed me.

"'Her Majesty the Queen Regent has been good enough to confide fully in my discretion,' I said to him. 'I beg that you will do the same. Where are these men?'

"He murmured his excuses, and led the way down to the main entrance. On the way I remarked:

"'I do not see many persons about.'

"'No, M. le Baron; there seldom are at this time of day.'

"A thought struck me. I consulted my watch.

"'About this time, I think,' was the answer. 'Do you consider that anything turns on that?'

"'It reduces the number of witnesses,' I replied, evasively.

"By this time we were at the entrance, where we found a number of lackeys. The father presented me to them.

"'The doctor is seeking for information as to the source of the King's illness,' he explained. 'Which of you saw His Majesty get into the carriage to go to the review?'

"Three of the men stepped forward, evidently surprised. I gave them no time to invent falsehoods.

"'Did you notice how the King was looking when he went out?' I demanded.

"'I didn't see His Majesty's face, senor. But I fancy he had a chill, for he was well wrapped up.'

"'So? And did none of you observe anything else unusual?'

"One of the other two looked as if he were hesitating to speak. I turned a penetrating look on him.

"'Now you remind me, senor,' he said, respectfully, 'I think there was something wrong with His Majesty. I don't think he walked quite firmly, and he didn't hold himself up in the same way as usual.'

"I was satisfied, and led the way back into the palace, followed by Father Oliva. He was very curious to know what was in my mind. I began to find the good father wearisome; however, I excused myself from saying anything then, and promised to be more explicit later on.

"As we were returning to his room an awkward incident took place. A door opened at a short distance in front of us, and a man came out, who bowed to my companion.

"'That is Dr. Henarez, who is attending the palace chef,' he whispered in my ear. 'Shall I present you to him?'

"'The devil, no!' I replied in consternation. 'He would inquire about the faculty in London, and penetrate my disguise directly.'

"'True; I had forgotten that you were disguised,' muttered this simple creature. And we allowed the physician to pass without speaking, though I observed him casting inquisitive looks at me.

"I asked if the cook were a fellow countryman of my own, and was amazed to learn that this was not the case. It was inconceivable to me that a Spaniard should understand the culinary art, and I observed as much to my companion.

"'Yet I can assure you that his cookery is very much esteemed,' he answered, smiling, 'by no less a person than the King of Spain. If my pupil had been really ill, I should have put it down to Senor Gomez, his tarts are so much in demand in the nursery.'

"'He seems to have made himself ill instead,' I retorted. 'Has he been laid up long?'

"'About a week, I believe. It is to be hoped he will recover by the time His Majesty comes back, or the King will be terribly distressed.

"I ceased to reply to the worthy father's conversation, being absorbed in considering my next move. As soon as we were again in his room I requested him to send for the steward of the household.

"He complied, not without several delicate attempts to elicit my motive for this step. But he was dealing with an old diplomatist. You will readily believe that he elicited exactly what I desired him to.

"On the steward's appearance, I repeated the explanation of my pretended mission. I also exhibited the powers furnished me by the Queen Regent, so as to stifle at once any possible objection to my demands. I then gave him these instructions:

"'In the first place, I require you to examine the servants stationed at the various entrances to the palace, and to draw up a full report, showing all the persons who have entered or left the building within the last 10 days, with the times of their coming and going. You will make this report as accurate as possible. Secondly, you will at once station a special agent at each of these entrances, with instructions to allow no one, whatever his position or business, to enter or leave the palace, without first communicating with me, and obtaining my sanction.'

"The steward bowed.

"'Do these orders apply to the kitchen entrance, by which the supplies of the palace are received, senor?'

"'They apply especially to that entrance. There is no more fruitful source of contagion than food, particularly milk.'

"The steward was evidently impressed by this observation, which I flatter myself was not without ingenuity.

"'And they apply equally to the servants of the palace, I suppose, senor?'

"'To every man, woman and child in Spain, with the exception of the Queen Regent and the Prime Minister.'

"The steward was a sensible man. He asked no further questions, but departed to carry out his instructions.

"During the next hour I sat in the tutor's room, receiving continual messages with respect to the various persons who sought to come in or out. In each case I gave my consent. Finally the steward returned, bringing his report, a most admirable paper, which would have done credit to any chancellory in Europe. The name and, in most cases, the business of every visitor had been noted down with scrupulous care. I read the report through, and a mist came over my eyes.

"'You have done your work magnificently, senor,' I said to the steward. 'I am now going to show this document to the Queen. Should anyone want to enter the palace while I am with Her Majesty, be sure to let me know.'

"I dismissed him, and made my way with ill-suppressed agitation to the royal apartments, where I was instantly admitted. I handed the report to Her Majesty, and desired her to look through it, and see if it contained anything worthy to remark. She complied with my request, but observed nothing. I then ventured to put a question:

"'I should be grateful if Your Majesty could recollect any incident, however trivial, during the last few days before the King's disappearance, which might throw light on the means of persuasion employed by his abductors.'

"Queen Christina appeared slightly puzzled.

"'Persuasion? I do not follow you, M. le Baron. Surely that was not the method employed?'

"'Think, madame. The King must have very speedily discovered that his companions were not taking him to the review; he is a boy of high spirit, it is incredible that he should have made no struggle, no outcries which would have attracted attention.'

"'In other words?'——

"'In other words, wherever the King has gone to, he must, in the first instance, have gone willingly.'

"'Think again, madame. Did anything occcur to excite the King during the last few days? Children sometimes have strange ideas; they desire to leave their homes, to imitate Robinson Crusoe, to become bandits'——

"The Queen suddenly looked up.

"'There is one thing which perhaps I ought to mention to you, though the recollection is painful at this time. My son was very much put out with me shortly before this terrible event. It was on account of the dismissal of the chief cook, whom the steward had detected in gross dishonesty. This man, it appears, had a nephew, a child of about the King's own age, who had contrived to ingratiate himself with Alfonso, and through this nephew Gomez had got a petition into the King's hands, praying that his fault might be overlooked, and Alfonso was bitterly aggrieved.'

"'Enough, madame!' I had begun, when we were interrupted by the arrival of the steward. I begged the Queen to admit him.

"'You asked me to let you know, senor, if anyone desired to enter the palace, and I therefore thought it my duty to come to you, though it is only the case of a child.'

"'What child?' I asked as calmly as I could.

"'Pedrillo Gomez, the cook's nephew, who has come to visit his uncle.'

"'He cannot be admitted for the present,' I said sternly. 'Detain him in your room till you hear from me.'

"The steward was plainly confounded. Bu

XII. AT THE DEVIL'S BALL.

SYNOPSIS

LIEUT. FORBES, U. S. A., back from the Philippiness, sees New York after many years' absence and it goes to his head. He follows, by means of a Fifth avenue bus, a motor car containing a lady who fascinates him, although he does not see her face. That night at a theater Murray Ten Eyck introduces him to Persis Cabot and he learns she is the lady he followed. Her party adopts him and teach him to tango. In 24 hours he is deeply in love with Persis, who seems to be engaged to Willie Enslee, principally because Willie is rich and the elder Cabot is losing his footing in Wall street. Willie Enslee decides to go to his place in the country. Persis, Forbes and all the others go with him, a thoroughly unconventional house party. After a runaway accident Forbes proposes, is accepted, discloses that he has only his lieutenant's pay and is rejected. Persis consents to marry Enslee and Forbes accepts appointment as military attache to Senator Tait who is made Ambassador to France. Persis and Forbes meet at a ball given by Ambassador Tait in Paris.

"I SAY, Persis, I lost track of you in that ghastly mob. I'm sorry. By the way, wasn't that tall fella in the uniform the same Lieut. What's-his-name that was honeying around Mrs. Neff?"

Persis was in too fierce a mood to continue that nonsense. She turned on Willie as a she-wolf turns on a terrier at her heels:

"Oh, Lord! Can't I escape you for a moment? Do go somewhere and smoke something. Or if the worst comes to the worst, drink something, but don't stand there making green eyes at me like an ape."

"Green eyes like an ape!" he echoed, stupidly. "Well, I'll be"—— Then an unusual vigor of wrath stirred him. "Look here, Persis, I won't have you make fun of me. I'd rather have you hate me than make a fool of me. I won't be laughed at—I won't."

Willie was about to reply in kind, but he gave her a long look and, seeing how beautiful she was, grew more tender. "Everything seems to have ceased to be a laughing matter to you, Persis. What has come over you? Before we were married you were always laughing—at everything, everybody. But from the time we were married you quit laughing. Hang it all, I married you to cheer me up a bit. What in heaven's name has changed you?"

"I suppose you're just tired of me," he sighed. "Everlasting me. I must be a nuisance to you. Lord knows I am to myself!"

She looked at him with suddenly gentle eyes. In contemning himself he was commending himself. The best approach to a human tribunal, as to a divine, is a humble and contrite heart. She put out her hand to him, but he did not see it; he set off to find someone to lead him to a Scotch highball. And Persis, now that she was rid of him, was free to glide forward to the marble bench, where she could see Forbes half concealed in a grotto of shadow and a mood of gloom.

The thought of what she was about to do gave her pause. She realized the atrocity of attempting to keep Forbes in mind when she had taken such solemn vows so publicly. She must be kinder to Willie. She tried to dismiss her conscience by telling herself that it would be childish to run away from Forbes. She caught sight of Mrs. Neff hovering about with the recaptured Alice. She dreaded what interpretation Mrs. Neff would put upon her appearance in the environs of Forbes. She remembered with what fierce cricism she had always met the slightest indiscretions of other married women.

Later she happened upon the surreptitious Stowe Webb, and learned that Senator Tait and Forbes were leaving Paris in the morning to take the waters somewhere—Vichy, Carlsbad, Marienbad or Matlock; he was not sure where.

She sent for Willie, and he came with a slight elevation of manner which showed that he had found someone to arrange him at least one Scotch-and-soda.

He was demonstrative in the car and very affectionate in the elevator at the Hotel Meurice, where they were stopping. This did not endear him to Persis.

His man exchanged a glance with her maid as they peeled off their wraps. When man and maid had been sent to bed, Willie came shuffling into Persis' dressing room where she sat staring at her doleful beauty in the mirror. He saw how listless she was, and was awkwardly eager to cheer her up. He could not have depressed her more than by trying to cheer her up.

"Oh, I say, Persis, buck up! Don't feel like this. You're so beautiful; you're simply ripping tonight." He laid his hand on her bare arm. She started at his touch and before she realized it gasped, "Please don't paw me."

He stared at her, aghast: "Do you hate me as much as that?"

"Oh, I don't hate you, Willie! It's myself I hate," Persis cried. "You mustn't mind me; I'm just a little blue and lonely."

He laughed grewsomely. "Bride and groom together on honeymoon, and both terribly lonely! Gad! I wonder if other married couples come to feel this way when the honeymoon turns to green cheese. And do they just bluff it through? It reminds me of that chap in Hogarth's 'Marriage a la Mode,' where the wife is yawning and the husband is sunk back in his chair in a dismal stupor. Only he was drunk—I think I'll get drunk."

Persis sat in grim communion with her image for hours. She faintly heard her husband's tapping on her door, and calling through it at intervals in thicker and thicker speech. But it was like a far-off rumor from a street. She was in session with herself.

She took her boudoir cap from her hair, and sat in the cascade of it, peering through as from a cavern, and smoking always. She was smoking much too much, but she felt a companionship in tobacco. As she held the cap in her hand she thought of Forbes; and the remembrance was so joyous that she vowed to brave the world to get back to him.

Then she pictured how he would look at her when he nderstood. She imagined him starting back from er as from something abhorrent. She threw a cigette stub at her face in the mirror and gasped: Pah!" She could endure anything better than such eapening of herself in Forbes' eyes. And after a hile she began to think of her self-respect. She had ly herself. She must keep that self precious.

Hours later she woke in broad daylight and crept bed with tingling arms and aching forehead. She did t wake again till noon. Nichette had tiptoed about s like a sentinel and had kept Willie at a distance. He discharged her a dozen times, but she simply shrugged and sniffed and answered him in French too rapid for him to follow or reply to.

When at last Persis sat up with her coffee and crescents on her knees, Nichette read to her the news in French columns of the Paris Herald. She learned that Ambassador-elect Tait and his entourage had gone to Evian-les-Bains.

Willie came in with new plans for Persis' diversion. He suggested a visit to Switzerland and Lake Geneva. She would have liked to go to the mountains. There was something heroic in them. But Evian was closely adjacent to Switzerland. She nobly suggested Norway and Sweden. The thought of fjords and midnight suns and things was also heroic.

In the meanwhile she must make haste to dress for the Prix des Drags, and she took some interest in the choice of a gown sufficiently striking to insure success in the fierce rivalry of that great costume race.

EVERYBODY said that the world had not seen such undressing in public since the Grecian revival at the time of the Directoire. Persis was not the least astounding figure there. She felt that, after a deed of such sacrifice as she had achieved in forswearing love, she had earned an extra license in her draperies. Willie raised a tempest about her gown, but she felt that she had gone enough for him. She was suffering that morning-after sullenness which follows unusual indulgence in virtue as well as other excesses.

Life once more was a tango. She shifted from costume to costume like a dressmaker's model. She went the rounds of thes dansants, and musicales, and embassies, town houses, hotels and chateaux, watering places and mountains, lakes and seas. But she kept away from Switzerland till she read that Ambassador Tait was at his desk in Paris; and then she avoided Paris and went to Trouville.

And so the days totaled into weeks, and the weeks became a month, two, three, six. She fled from boredom to boredom. She skimmed the cream of life and whipped it, and it turned sour. Though her abiding places were all oases and her tents were of silk, she led only a Bedouin existence. After all, she and Willie were but tramps—velvet-clad hoboes. Variety became monotony, luxury an oppression, contentment a will-o'-the-wisp.

She went to America and found that loveless contentment was not among the Yankee inventions. She went back to Europe and it was not among the Parisian devices. There was everything for sale on the Rue de la Paix except peace. She had not come to Paris purposely to find Harvey Forbes, but she had sickened of being good and she had grown nauseated with denying her heart. If fate willed that their communion should be renewed she would no longer tamper with destiny.

She wondered if time had cured Forbes' love. She wondered if he cared for someone else—Mildred Tait, for instance, or some Parisian witch. At the mere thought her heart beat like the wings of a wounded bird, and she knew that she loved him and always would love him.

This was her humor when she met Forbes again. She had tried in various ways to gain invitations to affairs of the embassy. But Tait wasted no diplomacy on cutting out the Enslees. He was the more brutal about this since he felt that he was guarding his daughter's welfare.

And then the Enslees came to Paris in an unusual snowstorm, and winter set in about the old man's overworked, undermined heart. He did his best to keep Persis and Forbes apart; but when were the old ever vigilant enough to thwart the young?

One day Mrs. Mather Edgecumbe found the Enslees shivering like a pair of waifs in a restaurant famous for its cuisine and infamous for its heating arrangements. She asked them if they were coming to the dansant she was giving at her home that afternoon. They had forgotten all about it, and Persis pleaded an engagement with her doctor. Mrs. Edgecumbe was "so sorry. There would be hardly any Americans there, then, except the old faithful Ambassador and Capt. Forbes."

Persis' heart warmed instantly, but she said she was afraid that she had some other engagement booked; in any case, they might drop in for a minute. She shivered with exultance and blamed it on the chill.

When 5 o'clock came round Persis carelessly remembered the half-promise to Mrs. Mather Edgecumbe. Willie was out of humor. Persis angelically urged him to stay in his room and nurse his cold. Her unusual thought of his welfare startled him. It delighted him. He decided to stay by her and get more of the tenderness she was lavishing today. She could not shake him loose.

The dansant was a failure in Mrs. Mather Edgecumbe's mind, and in her sister Winifred's heart, for the storm kept most of the Parisians away, and the Ambassador sent word by Forbes that he would be tardy if he came at all. He pleaded motives of state. But he sent Forbes with his apologies.

FORBES, having been on a visit in his official capacity, was again in uniform. His eyes and cheeks were aglow from the cold, and Persis watched him with adoration as he came nearer and nearer.

He did not see her, even when he paused to talk to Mrs. Edgecumbe, so close to Persis that she could have touched him. And when she could not endure the delay any longer, she thrust her hand beneath his eyes and murmured: "Capt. Forbes doesn't remember me, but I met him in New York ages ago."

Her voice, suddenly leaping out of the grave of memory, terrified him. He whirled so quickly that his sword caught in her gown. He knelt to disengage it, and there was laughter over the confusion, and then Mrs. Edgecumbe was called away by a newcomer, and they were together.

Persis beamed upon the complete disarray of all his faculties, and spoke with affected raillery, though her own mind was in a seethe.

"At last we meet again! And how magnificent we are in our gorgeous uniform! It's only the second time I've seen you in it. And I believe we are no longer plain Mr. Forbes—but Captain! Capt. Harvey Forbes, U. S. A.! And they say we are rich now. What a pity I didn't wait a little!"

Forbes was hurt at her flippancy. He smiled dismally, and she purred on: "I assure you your title and your wealth are vastly becoming; almost as becoming as all these buttons and epaulettes and things." She walked around him, looking him over like an inspecting officer. "Um-m! How very nice. Magnificent!"

There was so dire a meaning in her hint and so much danger in playing again with the fire whose scar he still bore that Forbes ceased fencing and slashed: "Why do you torment me? You refused my love once."

"Never your love, my dear boy," said Persis, with abrupt seriousness. "I never refused your love—only your hand. I always encouraged your love."

"But I was poor," Forbes sneered.

"Yes, you were poor," Persis said, taking his own word and turning it against him, "and I knew less than I do now." She walked away to a niche beside a statue, where they could talk without being overheard, but, being visible, were chaperoned by the crowd. She sank upon a settle of gold and old rose and motioned him to her side. Then, while her face and her fan proclaimed that their conversation was of the idlest, her voice was deep with elegy:

"Harvey, try to be just. If you had been rich—oh! if you had been rich!—then, as you are now, Harvey, then I could have believed that such a thing as a love-match is feasible."

"That was fate's fault, not mine," said Persis, in all solemnity. "But haven't I been honest with you? You declared that you loved me; I confessed that I loved you."

"Was it honest, then, not to give me your heart?"

"My whole heart has always been yours for the asking—and still is."

FORBES recoiled with a sudden: "What are you saying? You have a husband now!"

"What does that prove?" was Persis' grim reply. "I don't owe him anything in the inside of my heart. He didn't buy that, thank God! Before the world, I owe him everything, and I should be the first to abhor any open indiscretion, for my ten commandments are condensed to two: 'Don't be indiscreet!' and 'Beware of what people will say!' What more could a husband ask?"

Forbes tossed his hands in despair. He gave her up. She and her creed were beyond his understanding.

"I wasn't bred in your world. I can't understand a thing you have said," he groaned.

His aloofness of manner gave Persis a sense of loneliness, and she wailed to him as from afar. "But can't you understand how fate has made a fool of me? I married for wealth and to cut a wide swath. Well, I have the wealth. I can cut the swath. But I've found that my ambition isn't enough, any more than your soldier ambitions were enough. Harvey, I'm lonely, terribly lonely. My heart is empty; it is like an old deserted house, and a ghost haunts it, and the ghost is—I don't have to tell you who the ghost is?"

Persis was melted by his kinship with her suffering. She leaned so close to him that her very perfume appealed to him as the perfume wherewith one flower calls to another in the noontime of desire. And she said: "Harvey, I'm going to tell you a terrible secret that I've hardly dared to tell myself: I—I crossed the ocean to find you!"

He was suffocated with longing for her, and horror of her. He gasped: "My God! On your honeymoon!"

Everywhere in that day there seemed to be a band somewhere playing a turkey trot. There was such a band here, and such music was to be expected; but there was something whimsical about the fact that the tune this band struck up now was a rag-time version of "Mendelssohn's Wedding March."

A wanton whoop of the violins swept away all such solemn things as honor, decency, duty. He rose and caught her in his embrace. It was the same girlish body, irresistibly warm and lithe. They swung and sidled and hopped with utter cynicism. The only rem-

"Come to Paris?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Because I felt you still loved me as I still love you, and because I thought you were—perhaps—afraid."

"Afraid, eh?" He laughed, his professional soldier's pride on fire. "Well, I don't think you will find me a coward."

And he tightened his arm about her like a vise and spun her so dizzily that, though she was rejoiced by his brutality, the discretion that was her decalogue spoiled her rapture. She felt again that swoon of fear, and made him lead her back to their niche.

SHE did not know that Ambassador Tait had come in and had watched the vortex, was watching now with terror the look on Forbes' face and her answering smile.

"That does not mean that I am never to see you alone, does it?" she asked, anxiously and challengingly.

"Not if we were very discreet," Persis pleaded, thinking of those lonely months.

And as if in object-lesson, Willie Enslee joggled up that very moment. He showed the influence of mild tippling on a limited capacity, and, coming forward, shook hands foolishly and forcibly with Capt. Forbes. "How d'ye do—Mr. Ward," he drawled.

"Capt. Forbes, dear," Persis corrected.

"That's right. I always was an ass about names, Mr. Ward. I haven't seen you for years and years, have we? Have you met my wife? Oh, of course you have."

Forbes revolted. There was something loathesome about the little farce. Enslee reminded him of the clown in "I' Pagl'acci," and Persis, like another Nedda, was determined to finish the scene. Tucking her fan under her thigh, she said with innocent voice, "Oh, Willie, I've lost my fan somewhere; would you mind looking for it?"

Obediently Enslee turned and wandered about, scanning the floor carefully and chortling idiotically, "Fan, fan, who's got the fan?" And so he floated harmlessly and blindly out of the cloud that was thickening around his household.

But now she was confronted by an adversary of more weight and acumen than Willie, a man whose trade was diplomacy and politics. He was a little pale and weak, and he felt his heart laboring in his breast, but he had at least one more good fight in him, and when he found Forbes plainly enmeshed, though struggling, in Persis' gossamer web, the old man resolved to make the fight at whatever cost.

After a moment of hesitation he came briskly forward with a blunt: "Pardon me a moment, Mrs. Enslee, I have an important communication for the Captain. These state secrets, you know." And he led Forbes to an adjoining room, the library, where he said in a low tone, "Harvey, my boy, I've cooked up an imaginary errand to get you away from her."

Tait's eye grew very sad, though his lips smiled when he said: "Well, I'm afraid for you. You're not responsible when you're in her magnetic circle." Then, seeing that Persis had resolutely followed them into the room, he raised his voice for Persis' benefit: "You'll find the papers on my desk. Read them carefully and sign them if they're all right. They must be mailed this evening." Then he deliberately pushed the reluctant and faltering Captain from the room, hardly leaving him time to say, "You'll excuse me, Mrs. Enslee?"

Persis understood it all and answered with thinly veiled pique, "I'll have to." But she would not surrender him so easily. She called after Forbes, "I'll expect you back as soon as you have signed those—alleged papers."

The Ambassador was jolted. He could think of nothing to say. He watched Forbes go, then started to follow; noted that Persis was alone, and remembered the laws of courtesy enough to ask:

"May I send you an ice—or your husband?"

"An ice—or my husband?" Persis was forced to smile at such a collocation. "Neither, please. Sit down, Ambassador."

TAIT had no expected this. With a hesitating "Er—ah! ank you!" he seated himself as far as po e from her on a leather divan. Immediat e rose, crossed the room and sat next to him. The s no escaping her now, and Tait felt like calling fo .

Persis forsook al modulations of diplomacy and cut straight to the "Ambassador Tait, why don't you like me?"

"Why I—I admire mmensely," he gasped, amazed.

"You love Capt. F , don't you?" Persis lunged at his heart again; e answered, solemnly:

"Yes, I do; as if he my own son."

"Why don't you wa e to see him?"

"Why do you want to him? You're married."

"But they don't keep men in harems nowadays. Paris is very dull this w r. Don't take Capt. Forbes away again."

"As I remember, you ga him marching orders once yourself. You mustn't mind if he goes of his own accord now."

"But he won't go of his own accord if you don't make him. Why do you? You're not afraid of me?"

"Oh, but I am."

Persis laughed with a kind of pride. "Really! You flatter me! But why?"

Tait twisted his big, soft hands together and stared at her a long while before he could speak. "This is very embarrassing, Mrs. Enslee; but since you are so frank, let me ask you one question. Will you answer it frankly?"

"That depends upon the question," Persis chuckled, never dreaming of its nature. When it came it was:

"Are you in love with Capt. Forbes?"

The old lawyer repeated the demand:

"Are you in love with Capt. Forbes?"

"I think he is very nice," she dodged. "But what has that to do with our friendship?"

"Friendship!" Tait exclaimed, with bitterness. "In my day, Mrs. Enslee, I have seen some of the proudest families in New York dragged into the mire of public shame by tragedies that began as innocent experiments in friendship. Don't risk it, Mrs. Enslee. You are on dangerous ground."

She mused aloud. "And you think he loves me still?"

A gesture of disgust escaped the Ambassador. "How long could such love remain innocent—when it begins by being unlawful?"

"But I love him" she insisted, "and he loves me with all his heart. Some day, I presume," the coming sorrow cast its shadow over her already," some day, no doubt, he'll find somebody he loves more, and he'll marry her. He can have anybody now; but when he came to me he was poor; he needed money. But I also needed money! Things have changed; money has come to him, as it always comes, too late. But that's no reason for robbing me of my chance for a little while And you mustn't—oh, you mustn't rob him piness I could give him!"

"But, my good woman—my dear girl—you chance; you made your choice. You mu price. We can't all have the love we wa You can't."

Persis would not be crushed with p sneered: "Society! Is anybody on the shouldn't we be happy in our own way?"

Tait hesitated, then answered coldly: 10,000 reasons, Mrs. Enslee. I'll give you will appeal to you most strongly: 'You're found out.'"

She blanched at this facer. "Don't though I were a criminal!"

He struck out again: "Then don't beco have no right to love Capt. Forbes, nor h It is a simple question of duty."

Persis saw that for once appeal could said with resignation: "Then you a enemy?"

"No," Tait protested, "I would be your as I safely can. But I love Harvey as a save him from the fire of perdition, bea bright as it is. And you are the fire."

"And so you will fight me?" Persis falt

What could she do? Noth- truth could not be told, so she concocted a ll story to explain the loss to her husband.

"I told her she had made a fool of herself and she'll be wiser next time, but think of the others. Scores of young, inexperienced girls, who have not sense enough to judge between one man and another, attend these places. Some wanting just to dance; others perhaps looking for excitement. What is to prevent some of these glib young fellows to whom they are so casually introduced following up the acquaintance?

"It would not be human nature if flirtations thus begun were confined to the dance palaces in the city. All around New York are roadhouses remarkable for the beauty and luxury of their appointments. The space-devouring automobile has made them easy of access. Suppose you are a bit bored or tired of the floor you've been dancing on and your partner or yourself suggests a spin out to So-and-So's place and a little more tango when you get there—why not? It's variety. I know scores of women who do this sort of thing, taking along these casual tango 'partners.' Heavens! if their husbands but guessed what they were at! Others organize dance parties, start out early in the afternoon, dance madly until 6 with their 'partners' and return, looking innocent, in time for the family dinner.

"Such affairs as these may be no more than mere recklessness, but when women begin by taking these chances their desire for excitement is sure to lead them further astray. There are several so-called chateaux on Long Island that are beautiful on a clear moonlight night, restaurants where the lights are subdued, where the wines and viands are the finest, and where one may dine in bowers fragrant with the scent of fresh-cut flowers.

"And many—far too many—have private dining rooms and whose proprietors are none too circumspect!

"When this class of women go joy-riding, seldom do they use their own motors. Chauffeurs are engaged by husbands, you know, and might tell embarrassing stories. There are innumerable places that hire out richly appointed limousines and all one has to do is to telephone that such a car meet one at a given rendezvous, then collect one's party and off for the fun. No names are used, or false ones and settlement is in cash. The men do not pay. That is the woman's part in the society I am telling you about.

"I am not talking about morals. After all, common sense and foolishness are fair equivalents for right and wrong. When women do stupid, dangerous things of this kind trouble follows—if not at once, a bit later. I have positive knowledge of an instance in which three women of my acquaintance got themselves so badly involved that though they paid liberal blackmail, they are still trembling lest their husbands hear of their plight. They were persistent tangoers and became a bit infatuated with a trio of smart, agreeable youths whom they met through an Official Introducer. These men were expert 'partners,' danced the same steps and had lots of that gay, flip small talk for between times. Wall street men out of jobs because of the war, they said they were. One thing led to another. First little trips to other dancing places, all quite peaceful, the young men behaving beautifully. Then a big affair. This was an excursion to a big roadhouse on the Boston post road for dinner and a jolly long dance on a fine floor afterwards. The youths suggested it as an especially jolly lark. The women hired a limousine and off they started. Mind, they knew nothing whatever of the character of the place for which they were headed. They trusted the youths. Through a combination of circumstances, skillfully arranged, they suddenly found themselves, quite innocently, in a situation that might easily be interpreted as compromising, whereupon their escorts revealed themselves as blackmailers.

"They demanded money—quite a good sum, too—as the price of silence and release. Panic-stricken, one of the women rang the bell and summoned the proprietor and asked aid. This man, a short, fat, bull-necked person, emphasized the threats of the hawks. They paid—some money and some jewelry—and escaped. Later they learned that this proprietor had been notorious for years as the keeper of a restaurant and cafe on Forty-fifth street, in New York, which the police finally raided because the harpies who were evidently his accomplices became a bit too violent in their pigeon plucking exploits.

"That roadhouse is still a trap for reckless women.

"I could tell you other stories of a similar nature—but what's the use. The point is right here: these public tea dances and their Official Introducers, while they do afford perfectly innocent pastime to a lot of people, also offer opportunities to a particularly dangerous and odious type of crook to prey upon a class of women peculiarly defenseless by reason of their dread of scandal—women they could never meet or see under ordinary circumstances. Eaton was such a crook, and there are lots of others, you may be sure. That's one danger—another is the intimacies that spring up inevitably between gay young fellows with nothing to do or lose and idle married women who, after dancing together all an afternoon, with refreshments on the side, are liable to develop relationships which lead to mischief and the breaking up of homes."

Nearly everybody has some favorite medicine as a panacea for all tchinson points out there is not a single can be relied upon as "a good thing and all stages of sickness. All reme- guaranteed to cure immediately, "like ght," are good things to let alone. Liniments, sprain cures ittle harm and often are very helpful, ain substances such as ammonia, cam- etc., which irritate the skin and cause an increased flow of blood to the surface. The healing comes from the blood and not from the medicine. The more vigorously the liniments are rubbed the greater the benefit, because it is the massaging that does the work. "The only oil or grease," the author explains, "that can limber up a stiff joint is elbow grease."

It is a surprise, if not positively a blow, to most of us to be informed that the camphor and arnica of sacred memory derived all their healing properties from the alcohol they contained, which irritated the skin and caused the blood to rush into that sprained ankle or bruised muscle. We could have gotten as good results from using plain whisky, or massaging ourselves with a clothes brush!

It is equally surprising to learn that our cherished list of symptoms, beginning with a pain in the back, were not indications of an attack of Bright's disease. The doctor warns us not to rush to the drug store and buy anybody's kidney bitters, for they will do us no good and probably will do us harm. There is no remedy known to medical science, the doctor declares, which in any direct or specific way will cure or even help Bright's disease.

Also he advises us to go shy on laxatives, anti-bilious preparations, teas and tongue cleaners. They probably will not do us a great deal of harm unless we get a habit of using them, but will subject us to some unnecessary griping. Dyspepsia cures, such as contain pepsin, pancreatin, gingers, "pepper teas," etc., very often give temporary relief in cases of indigestion, but will not cure it.

We should be very chary of "blood purifiers," skin cleansers, internal complexion improvers, etc., because many of them contain mercury or arsenic or iodide of potassium, "useful medicines in their proper place, but edge-tools that it is anything but safe to play with."

Tonics and bitters, we are assured, are mostly a delusion and a snare. Dr. Hutchinson declares that a dollar's worth of cream contains ten times the "strength" of any dollar bottle of tonic ever invented.

"There is no known drug," he adds, "that will add in the slightest degree to the strength or vigor of the human body, and no 'tissue-builder' on earth except food. The only universally reliable 'bracer' is exercise in the open air and sleeping with your windows open, and the only permanent tonics to the human body are fresh fruit, red meat and green vegetables.

Exhilarating "tonics," pain relievers, colic cures, are likely to contain alcohol, opium or chloroform and should be feared. The only drug to be relied upon to stop a cough within a few hours is opium, which, of course, ought not to be used. Headache powders containing acetanilid, phenacetin, antipyrin, very often will relieve a headache, and, if people must have a narcotic for that purpose, are recommended as being milder and less poisonous than opium. It must be remembered, however, that these drugs have a deleterious effect on the heart and an overdose or even a moderate dose, taken by one whose heart is diseased, may cause death.

For the teeth we are advised not to waste money on expensive dentrifices or to endanger the enamel with pumice stone scouring. If one will brush the teeth after each meal and before going to bed, using cool water in which baking soda has been dissolved, one will keep them clean and free from tartar.

Eight-tenths of all colds, Dr. Hutchinson assures us, are mild infections which run their course until the body has time to produce an antitoxine, or antibody, to stop their further progress. Nature, under favorable circumstances, will cure a cold herself in from four to six days, provided she has the intelligent co-operation of the sufferers. "The only sure cold for colds and coughs is to avoid the infections and foul air of ill-ventilated rooms, to keep the body toned up to fighting pitch by cold baths and an abundance of cold air, especially in the bedroom; and if the affection does get a foothold, to assist nature in her fight against it by rest in the open air, and promoting elimination through the skin, bowels and kidneys."

For these reasons we are warned to beware of cough and cold remedies and particularly the former. Hutchinson declares that a cough never killed anybody, but that it is merely the surface indication of what may possibly be a serious condition. In 90 cases out of 100 it is only a temporary disturbance of the upper air passages. To stop the symptom without curing the cause would be the height of folly.

No pousse-cafe for them! They want 'the straight goods,' and Mansfield certainly handed them over." He admits, however, that Mansfield did great work towards uplifting the American drama.

The author is unstinted in his praises of Charles Frohman, Erlanger, Klaw and Belasco. Frohman he calls the most unselfish man he has ever met in the profession. He declares he would rather have Abe Erlanger's word than a contract from Rockefeller. Belasco he describes as an intelluctual giant, a scholar, an artist and a gentleman.

In a chapter just eight words long Goodwin pays his respects to Tyrone Power. The entire chapter is: "Gee! what a bully actor Tyrone Power is!"

In fond memory the author dwells upon a select gathering which used to "hang out" at John Chamberlain's famous hostelry in Washington City. Among them were Roscoe Conkling, James G. Blaine, President Arthur, Senators Brice, Breck, Blackburne and Jones, John G. Carlisle, William Mahone of Virginia, Arthur Pugh Gorman, Grover Cleveland, Speaker Crisp, Tom Reed, Lawrence Jerome, father of William Travers Jerome. Also he recalls another distinguished crowd which forgathered in New York, among them being William P. Travers, Wright Sanford, Cyrus Field, John Hoey, and Neil O'Brien. One day, as Goodwin was telling it, Travers, who stammered, bought a terrier from a dealer who swore it was the best rat catcher in town. To try it out he threw a husky rat into a box with the dog. The rat grabbed the terrier by the lip and bit him so severely that he ran yelping down the street. "Nev-nev-never mind the d-dog," said Travers, "wha-wha-what'll y-you take for the rat?"

Goodwin is warmly laudatory of his two friends, Digby Bell and De Wolf Hopper. He pronounces George M. Cohan as one of the finest geniuses the American stage has ever produced. He confesses also high admiration for John Drew, both as a player and as a man. He also places Wilton Lackaye among the elect, although apparently denying admission to William H. Crane. His praise of David Warfield hardly stops short of the fulsome. Lillian Russell, William H. Thompson, James A. Hearne, Eddie Foy, William Gillette, Willie Collier, Henry Miller, Beerbohm Tree, George C. Tyler all receive separate chapters of favorale criticism.

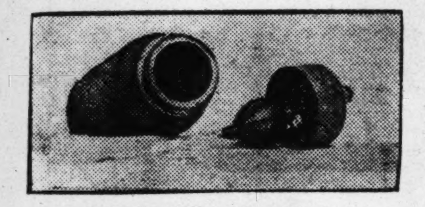
NOVEL THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Seals Salt From Air and Moisture

IN damp weather the salt in the table shaker becomes moist and it is difficult to get it to shower out through the small holes in the top. To avoid this difficulty, John Charles Ross of Perth Amboy, N. J., has invented a salt shaker that prevents the air from getting to the salt; thus the salt is kept dry and will not clog about the holes in the top of the shaker.

Mr. Ross' shaker (for which he has applied for a patent) may be of glass, china, metal or any suitable substance. Its inside is so formed as to provide a seat for a globular valve, which has a stem projecting through the perforated top or sifting cover. The valve acts automatically by gravity, falling into the closed position as soon as the shaker is placed upright. Thus it seals the salt and protects it against air and moisture.



Self-sealing salt shaker.

The usual motion opens the valve, allowing the salt to sift out through the perforated cover. Refilling is accomplished in the ordinary way, the valve lifting out with the cover when this is unscrewed.

Facts About the Feeding of Babies

THERE are certain fundamental facts that must be known in feeding infants. The first, and by far the most important, is that there is no substitute for a mother's milk. According to Dr. Edward Sherrard Rimer, the next best food to mother's milk is clean, fresh, pure, raw cow's milk.

"Let me emphasize," he said, "the essentials of wholesome cow's milk: Cleanliness; freshness, not over 24 hours old; purity; cold, from cow to consumer."

Dr. Rimer warned against most of the patent or proprietary foods, saying they contained large quantities of starch, a food that should never be given to a baby until after it is eight months old.

"Whole milk diluted with barley water or oatmeal gruel or plain boiled water, meets a majority of the average feeding requirements. It is simple, requires little manipulation, and there is nothing to be added but sugar."

But every baby has its individual requirements and each must be studied and its food modified accordingly.

Taste Different in Boys and Girls

GIRLS have more sensitive taste for bitter flavors than boys, and boys have a more sensitive taste for sweet flavors than girls, according to Dr. G. Cohn, author of a book on "Organic Flavoring Materials," recently published in Berlin.

The taste of boys and girls for saltiness is equal. Among adults woman has a taste for sweet, bitter and sour that is more highly developed than that of man. For salty things there is little difference, man, if anything, being slightly more sensitive than woman.

Oil Lakes Fool Water Fowl

IN the pools of oil around the great "gushers" of the West there is a great mortality among waterfowl. Every little lake of oil in the vicinity of a gusher is a trap for the unthinking birds. At twilight and dawn these tar-colored lakes appear as bodies of water to the deluded fowl.

Great flocks of migratory waterfowl have been seen to drop out of the heavens after sailing majestically above the barren, sun-parched desert and plunge into these oil lakes, says the Scientific American. Pelicans, snow geese and ducks of all varieties that fly annually between Alaska and the flats of the Colorado River swoop down to the oily bosom of these lakes. The moment feathers touch oil their flying days are over. The sight of fowl struggling in the oil apparently fails to deter others from the plunge.

Fourth Key on French Horn Added by St. Louis Musician

THE French horn is one of the most formidable instruments in the orchestra as to technique, so much so that there are only a few great performers on the instrument in the world. In an attempt to simplify its difficulties, Lorenzo Sansone, first French horn of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, has invented and is playing at this season's concerts an improvement of the instrument which he hopes will revolutionize French horn playing much as did its latest previous modification—the addition of keys a century ago.

The ordinary French horn is what is known as a transposing instrument—that is, it is pitched in the key of F instead of C. In addition, by pressing a key, its pitch may be lowered to B-flat, by which means the lowest notes in its great range of four octaves are obtained. When this is done, the player must make a second transportation of his notes, which is a feat of extraordinary difficulty.

By adding a fourth key to the three already in use, and by lengthening the tubing from 16 feet to about 23, Sansone has removed the necessity of changing the key to B-flat, so that the horn, from its highest to lowest register, is in the uniform key of F. To this simplification the advantage is added that the fourth key makes trilling more feasible. The addition of another key necessitates the development of a new system of fingering, and this Sansone has worked out in a manual which is to be published.

Make Your Christmas Pudding Now

IF the Christmas pudding be not already made, it is high time it was. For, if properly made, it needs a month to ripen.

There are many recipes for Christmas plum pudding, but the essential ingredient of them all is currants. Most of the puddings contain too much flour and bread crumbs. They must have a little of each, but the less the better.

The writer knows of one ancient recipe which he has been privileged to enjoy every Christmas for nearly 40 years, in which there is only one tablespoonful of flour and a scanty pound of grated bread crumbs to about 10 pounds of fruit, sugar, eggs, cream, etc. The fruit consists of currants, raisins, candied peels of various sorts; but the essential is currants.

An English writer says: "All confections in which currants preponderate are savory and pleasant. How delicious are the mince pies and the famous North of England Eccles cake; but, above all, the Christmas pudding must be given pride of place. The more currants it contains the better the pudding. You can easily earn a reputation as an expert maker of puddings, or any other sweet dish, if only you bear in mind the magic power of currants.

"Apart also from their delicious flavor, they are the pleasantest form of household economy, for, as men of science have taught us, currants possess a great food value, are all nutriment and easily digested. The moral of all this is, to insure a merry Christmas, see that your puddings and pies contain a liberal quantity of currants."

Biggest Fertilizer Plant

THE Odda Works in Norway is now producing 85,000 tons of calcium carbide and 80,000 tons of calcium cyanamide per annum. The nitrogen in these is entirely extracted from the atmosphere. The works are run by electric power from water falls, and this is now to be increased to about 1,000,000 horsepower, sufficient for the production of 2,000,000 tons of calcium cyanamide per annum. This is a valuable fertilizer.

NO MORE GOLD LACE FOR OUR OFFICERS IN WAR!

All Must Don Disguises to Dodge Deadly Sharpshooters

AN OFFICER READY FOR THE FIELD.

"HOW are we to keep our officers alive?" This has been—and is—one of the gravest problems which confronts the armies of both belligerents in Europe's mighty conflict. Losses among the men who lead are far greater in proportion than among the men who follow. The terrific mortality among the French officers and the English has been particularly noticeable. And the Germans also have been paying the same terrible tribute to the sharpshooter's unerring rifle.

One instance: The British expeditionary forces took their places on the firing line on Aug. 23. In seven weeks Gen. Sir John French had been bereft of the services of just 1146 of his officers—a sixth of all his leaders. Only a military man can appreciate what a frightful loss it is to an army to have a full sixth of its officers wiped out by death, wounds and capture in so short a period.

Today it is quite as grave a problem for Lord Kitchener to provide trained officers to fill these terrific gaps as it is to recruit men for the ranks, and England is fully alive to the gravity involved in this awful toll of carnage and death. As an earnest of how they feel, the officers still left on earth and unwounded have been ordered to make themselves as inconspicuous in battle as possible.

"Look precisely like your men!" is the substance of the order.

Great has been the change among the Britishers accordingly. They are not the target for the German sharpshooters that they were a few brief weeks ago. Their lesson is learned. They have found out that in each German section are two men provided with field glasses whose sole duty it is to pick out officers by their accoutrements and tip off the sharpshooters as to whom to aim. It's their business to fool these men with the glasses.

Twenty different things distinguish a British officer from his men. Aside from the smarter cut of his uniform he is betrayed by his sword, his open jacket with the low collar and the necktie; by his absence of pack and his "Sam Browne" belt. His field glasses are also a shining mark. Every effort is made to hide these now.

At the beginning of the war French officers were even better targets for the German sharpshooters. The greater length of their red trousers due to the absence of the long leggings; white gloves, half a dozen different accoutrements; and the ever- present gold lace—a Gallic joy—betrayed the officers to the watchful enemy and so they were picked off in droves. Every unit among the Germans had its men with the field glasses spying out the luckless officers for their doom.

In one engagement, for example, a single French regiment lost 25 per cent of its officers. Most of them were young men, fresh from the military school at St. Cyr, and they had taken a vow to go into their first battle all spick and span, even to the white gloves. That was enough for the men with the field glasses, and the poor youths fell in their first fight, victims of their well-intentioned pride.

Gen. Joffre thereupon gave orders that white gloves were not to be worn by anyone in battle.

Nevertheless the percentage of losses among his officers continued so high that further inquiry was made of talkative prisoners. It was found that the German job of picking off the opposing officers had been reduced to such a science that almost anything betrayed the man of rank from his humbler comrade. The gold stripes on trousers and kepis gave away the French officers quite as effectual as their gloves. Gen. Joffre supplemented his kid glove order with another requiring officers to wear the same uniforms as the private soldiers. The mortality rate among officers fell some more; but it still remained far above that of the rank and file. Gen. Joffre was immensely puzzled, until he discovered that the kepi cover had a gap in it through which the number of the officer's regiment and a bit of gold braid was visible. The latest order from the astute French General is that officers must cover their vari-colored kepis exactly as the privates cover theirs.

Censors don't let us become so intimate with the German army as to learn, first hand, about such things; but the "pickelhaupted sloggers" are taking equally wise precautions to dodge the British crack shots who can pot the Kaiser's officers as far as they can spy them. In fact, many officers of both sides in making ready for a charge leave their swords behind them and go in with rifles over their shoulders to deceive the sharpshooters of the enemy and the men with the field glasses.

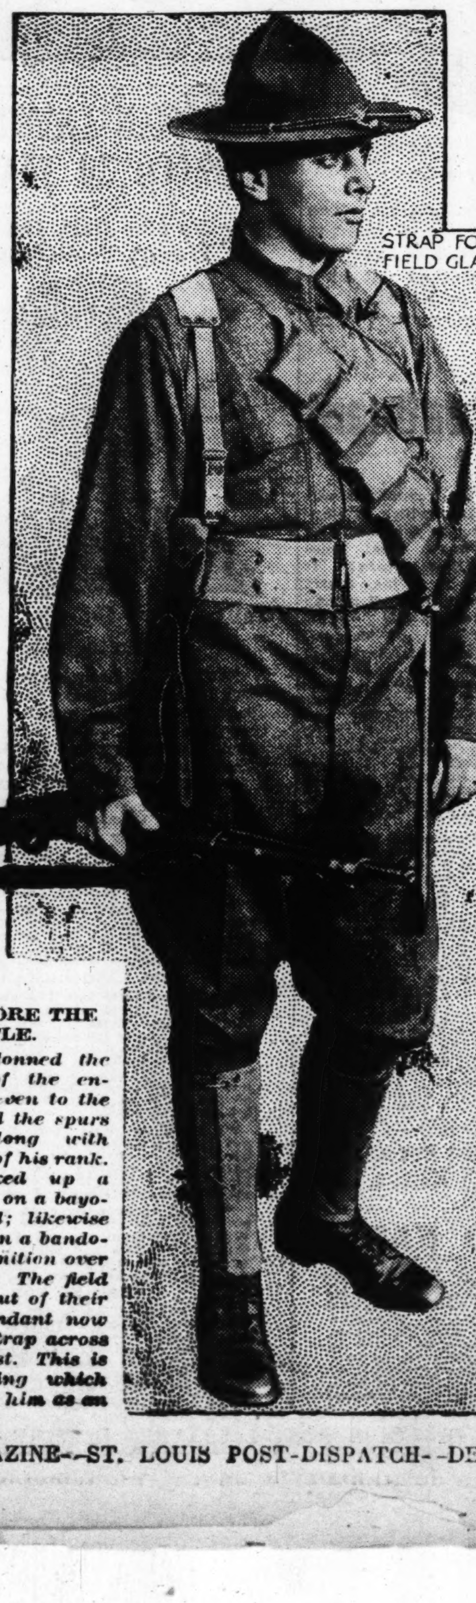
AN OFFICER IN FULL EQUIPMENT.

He is distinguished from his men by the gold and black hat cord, the white collar and cuffs, the crossed rifles with the number of his regiment; the "U. S." on his collar, the Captain's bars on his shoulders, the chains for his whistle and compass, the field glasses supported by the broad strap, the belt, the pistol and holster strapped to his right leg, the saber, the band on the sleeve of his coat, the leather leggings and the spurs.



JUST BEFORE THE BATTLE.

He has donned the equipment of the enlisted man, even to the leggings, and the spurs are gone along with the insignia of his rank. He has picked up a rifle and put on a bayonet scabbard; likewise he has thrown a bandolier of ammunition over his shoulder. The field glasses are out of their case and pendant now by the tiny strap across his left breast. This is the only thing which distinguishes him as an officer.

Not so the American officer, who may be quite as resplendent as the foreigner at a military garden party or in a review for the President of the United States. For war he turns back to the dull and uninteresting olive drab attire the moment he takes the field.

First to go is the saber, from time immemorial the badge of an officer's rank from the commanding General down to the junior Second Lieutenant. It is no longer worn in the field. The automatic pistol takes its place at once. The Philippines taught the Yankee officer that lesson.

There still remain many items which would betray him. These are the black and gold hat cord, the band on the sleeve of the coat, the belt, the leather puttees or leggings, the field glasses, the bronze collar devices indicating the arm of the service and the number of his regiment, the wrist watch, the compass, the whistle, the gloves, the white collar and cuffs, the pouch for pistol ammunition, and the holster for his revolver which he wears strapped down to his right leg. His canteen and haversack might correspond to those worn by the men.

A battle is imminent. The brief orders come out that on the morrow the regiment goes in to do or die. Quietly the officers make their preparations. The gold hat cord goes and one like the men's—or none at all—takes its place. The field glasses come out of their case and are hung over the back by a slender strap not distinguishable 50 yards away. Canvas leggings take the place of the smart leather puttees. Watch, compass and whistle go into convenient pockets. Spurs are dropped off for mounted infantry officers, who do not ride in battle anyway lest they betray themselves. All that is left now to distinguish the officer from his men is the pistol and the slender strap which hold the field glasses.

American officers learned all this in the Philippine jungles. The French and English, the Germans and the Russians, to say nothing of all the other minor nationalities on both sides, are fast learning the same lesson in the trenches of France, Belgium and Russia.

What Will People Say?

good-by—and make him think I was only—only fooling him, haven't I?"

The old man's triumph collapsed again. But he could not demand everything. He nodded and left her as Forbes appeared at the door. With the mocking laughter of fiends, the band played another tango. It was faint in the distance, but it was a satanic comment. Persis made haste to get her business done.

"But I thought," he stammered. "You're not going to leave just as we meet again? I thought"——

"You ought to have known I was only fooling you. I'm Mrs. Enslee now. And whom God hath joined"——

He was beside himself with rage. She had wheedled him out of his honor, and now she mocked him where she had left him He sneered:

"God didn't join you and Enslee. God's voice doesn't speak every time a hired preacher reaches out for a wedding fee! It was the devil that joined you, and God keeps you asunder. God joined you with me. He meant us for each other. But you hadn't the courage to face a little poverty. You wanted prestige and position, and you bought them with the love that belonged to me. You haven't the courage now to deny that you are unhappy, that you love me still."

She trembled before the storm of his wrath. "But I don't—I don't love you any more. I am happy."

"Do you love me still?" he demanded.

"N-no! Of course not!"

He wanted to strike her, primevally, for a coward, a liar, a female cad. He controlled himself and groaned: "Well, that makes everything simpler. Good-by."

She seized his arm and threw off the disguise. "Harvey, Harvey, I can't stand it. I can't endure the thought of it. I can't live without your love. I don't care what happens. I never did love anybody else but you. I never shall."

His love came back in a wild wave. He seized her blindly, and she hid blindly in his arms, sobbing: "I am so unhappy, so unutterably lonely! You must love me, Harvey, for I love you. I love you."

They were as oblivious of their peril as Tristan and Isolde in the spell of the love philter. Only the old Ambassador, who had hovered near to shield their farewell, saw them. The vision was like a thunderbolt. To hear of a scandal, to be convinced of it is as nothing to seeing it. That comes like an exposure, an indecency, a slap in the face. The Ambassador was furious with disgust. He stormed into the room: "Can I believe my eyes? Are you both lost to common sense? Is this your discretion, Mrs. Enslee? Do you realize where you are?"

Persis toppled out of Forbes' relaxed embrace, and spoke from a daze: "No—I forgot—I must be out of my mind."

Tait was filled with contempt. "What if it had been any of the guests that had found you two maniacs as I did. What if it had been Enslee!"

Persis was as amazed as he was. She muttered. "I know—I know—but I can't stand everything."

Tait tried to patch up his broken plan. "Harvey, you've disappointed me bitterly. But I give you one more chance to retrieve yourself. Promise me never to see Mrs. Enslee again."

Forbes shook his head.

Tait could hardly believe his senses. "My God! Must the deep friendship of two men always be at the mercy of the first woman that somes along? Harvey, Harvey, I beg of you to give this woman up!"

"I can't."

Forbes set his jaw hard. "I resign."

Tait snapped: "I accept."

PERSIS was frantic at this outcome of her passion "No, no! Oh, don't! I'd rather die than be the cause of a breach between you two." She clutched Tait's arm. "Don't listen to him!"

Forbes seized her other hand. "I'll not give you up again. You belong to me."

"You are wrecking my trust in humanity," Tait groaned; then his wrath blazed again. "But I'll break up this intrigue at any cost, even if I have to tell Enslee."

Tait had made one step to the door. He hung irresolute before the loathsome office of the tattle tale. "What in the name of God is a man to do? If I tell your husband I am a contemptible cad. If I don't tell him I am your accomplice." He pondered deeply, and chose between the evils. "Well, I'd rather have you two think me a cad than be a criminal and a coward." He took another step to the door.

Persis clung to his sleeve. "Oh, I implore you!"

He shook her loose: "I am going to tell your husband what I saw."

And then the man most deeply concerned appeared in the doorway. Willie Enslee stumbled at the sill and spoke with a blur: "Pershish, itsh time we were dresshing for d-dinner."

Tait looked at him in disgust, then at Persis and Forbes, who stood cowering with suspense. The old man shivered in an agony of decision. "Mr. Enslee, I must tell you"——

He clapped his hand to his heart, and struggled at the words: "I must tell you—I must tell you—good night!"

He could not force his tongue to the task. The fierce effort broke him. He wavered. A sudden languor invaded him. His muscles turned to sand. He crumpled in a heap.

Forbes ran to him, and with all difficulty heaved the limp huge frame into a chair that Persis pushed forward. He straightened the arms that flopped like a scarecrow's, and steaded the great leonine head that rolled drunkenly on the immense shoulders. And he spoke to Enslee as if he were a servant.

> Dancing at the devil's ball.

She ran to the door like a fury and shrieked: Stop that music! For God's sake, stop that music!"

THE music ended in shreds of discord. The dancers paused in puppet attitudes, then turned like a huddle of curious cattle and drifted toward the door. Persis returned to Forbes' side and, bending close, heard the old man speaking thickly as his hands fluttered feebly about Forbes' arm.

"Harvey—I'm so—sor-ry for you—and for her. Take care of—my poor—ch-child, won't you?"

"Yes, yes!" Forbes whispered.

"Th-thass—a goo' boy. You've been a—a—a—a son to me. Har-har-vey. Goo'-b-b— Good-by!"

Liveried servants with wan faces glided through the crowd, and, lifting the chair, struggled from the room with its great burden, the old head wagging, the lips laboring at the message they could not accomplish.

Forbes followed the chair as if it were already the coffin of his ideal among men. Persis waited in a trance, shaken now and then with sudden onsets of ague, but otherwise motionless, her whole soul pensive. Willie hung about her, whining:

"I say, old girl, let's be getting home—I feel all creepy. Awfully unfortunate, wasn't it? Let's be getting home. Rotten luck for the Ambassador. Nice old boy, too. Let's be getting home."

Persis did not answer. By and by Willie went in search of his coat and her furs. The other guests dispersed. Outside there was a muffled hubbub of chasseurs calling carriages and cars, of horns squawking, of doors slammed.

Persis stood fixed, staring where Forbes had gone. Suddenly her face lighted up. Forbes wandered back all bewildered. She forced her hand on him, and he took it idly. It was some time before he could speak that ultimate word "Dead!"

"Poor old fellow! I'm sorry he hated me so bitterly. He said he'd fight against my happiness till he died, and now"——

Forbes did not hear her. He was thinking only of the foster-father he had lost. He mumbled, with dark dejection:

"I'm alone now—alone!"

But Persis' face was overswept with a shaft of light. Glancing over her shoulder, and seeing that no one was near their door, she moved closer to Forbes, laid her other hand on his, and spoke with all meekness and with a questioning appeal:

"Not alone, Harvey? I'm here."

He opened his clenched eyes a little and met her upward gaze. He closed his eyes again against her. She waited. Only a moment, and then with a sudden frenzy he gripped her in a mad embrace and smote her lips with his. She closed her eyes in ecstacy.

Immediately he started back from her in horror, groaning: "What am I thinking? And he's just dead!"

"He's dead, but I live!" She meant only to soothe him, but through her low voice an exultance broke like a bugle of triumph, and she whispered again: "I live! I live!"

So the eyes of Jael must have widened when she had driven the nail through the temple of Sisera.

"'Madame,' I replied, with the utmost good humor, 'the child who has just come to the palace is some impostor. He is not Pedrillo Gomez at all.'

"'How can you say that, M. le Baron?'

"'Simply by referring to the report in Your Majesty's hand. You will see from it that the cook's nephew entered the palace last Monday morning at 8 o'clock, and that he has never left it since. Consequently, the child at the door must be someone else.'

"'Speak! What do you mean?'

"'I mean this,madame, that whereas I formerly asked for five days in which to bring your son to you, I now ask for five minutes. I am going to interview the true Pedrillo, the Pedrillo who has been concealed in the cook's apartment for the last four days.'

"I darted from her presence, and made my way straight through the building to the door from which I had seen Dr. Henarez emerge. I rapped, and a man's voice inquired:

"'Is that you, Pedrillo?'

"At the same time a bolt was withdrawn from inside, and the door partly opened. I slipped through, and walked into the middle of the chamber. The cook, a huge man, with as villainous a face as I have ever seen, eyed me like a tiger as I coolly took possession of his sitting room. No Pedrillo was anywhere to be seen.

"'Who are you, senor?' the man stammered out.

"'I am a doctor,' I responded, with the most friendly air in the world, feeling at the same time in the hip pocket, where doctors usually carry their medicine cases. 'I have been called in by another patient, and, hearing that you were ill, the Queen Regent graciously desired me to place my skill at your disposal.'

"'But, Senor Doctor, I do not need your services,' he muttered, terribly embarrassed, as he well might be, for the fellow was in perfect health. 'I have my own doctor.'

"'Nonsense,' I replied, 'an extra opinion can do you no harm. Besides, Her Majesty's commands must be obeyed. Let me feel your pulse.'

"I took it in my hand before he could object. It was beating at a tremendous rate.

"'I see clearly what is the matter with you,' I said. 'You are suffering from want of fresh air. Instead of being shut up in these two rooms—I suppose that is the door of your bedroom?—you ought to be out in the grounds. Let me advise you to put on your hat at once, and come out. I will give you my arm.'

"The wretch sank into a chair.

"'Indeed, senor, I am too ill to be moved. Tomorrow, perhaps.'

"'You make a mistake,' I retorted, interrupting him. 'I assure you these rooms are unhealthy. Let me see your bedroom.'

"While I spoke I went up and turned the handle of the door. As I had anticipated, it was locked. Gomez sprang towards me with flashing eyes. I did not hesitate a moment.

"'Sit down, Senor Gomez, if you please, or I will shoot you like a dog.' And I snatched out my revolver and leveled it at his breast.

"He sank back, shuddering. I turned the key, and opened the bedroom door."

"There," he said, sending out a great puff of smoke—"there, seated on the floor, amid a disorganized army of leaden troops, his hands black with dirt, his hair rough like a dog's, and his charming lips all smeared with jam, I beheld His Majesty the King of Spain, calmly devouring one of his favorite tarts."

"And after?" I said, as the Ambassador again came to a full stop.

"And after? Why, is there anything more? I caught up the young rascal in my arms, King or no King, and made two steps of it to where his mother was waiting. Do not ask me to describe that scene. Such emotions are sacred."

I firmly believe that the Ambassador was actually moved. I was silent for a moment.

"I am not quite sure that I have followed all the steps by which you arrived at your discovery," I said presently.

"My friend, you cannot have been listening. Did I not tell you at the outset that the boy left his tutor's room with only a hat on? The moment I heard of the wraps I perceived that something must have taken place during the passage through those deserted corridors. When I found that no one had seen the face of the boy who entered the carriage, and that his walk and bearing were different from the King's the whole plot was clear. The conspirators, afraid to risk carrying the young monarch through the streets of his own capital, has disposed of him in the palace on the way out, and carried away another boy to create a false scent.

"The scheme was clever enough. The moment I had realized the character of the plot, it only remained to discover whether the King had been taken out of the building since, and, if not, with whom he was likely to be concealed. At the same time I took precautions against his slipping through my fingers while I was engaged in the search."

"The cook, I suppose, made a full confession?"

"I had left him very little to confess. It appeared that he had been the chief contriver of the plot, in revenge for his own dismissal. He had got two accomplices from outside, one of them that doctor, who was as great an impostor as I was myself.

"They elaborated their plans with a good deal of ingenuity. Gomez began feigning illness several days before the review, and made his nephew come to and fro continually, so that his appearance ceased to excite remark. Then they dispatched the warning through Pamplona, and lay in wait.

"The King was, of course, brought straight from the tutor's presence into the cook's apartment, and exchanged for Pedrillo, and all that remained was for Gomez to keep the child prisoner, by force or persuasion, till they could contrive to smuggle him out of the way unobserved. The idea of obtaining the ransom while the captive was still in his own palace was a brilliant afterthought."

"They were not punished?"

"No; it would have been unwise. They were informed that if they ever referred to their exploit they would be put on trial for high treason, and they seem to have held their tongues. Of course the fiction of the illness was kept up to the end, and the King's convalescence duly announced.

"What pleased me most in the affair was the vindication of my friend Don Carlos. Queen Christina was good enough to express regret to me for having allowed her suspicions to rest on his followers. She also expressed herself very handsomely about the trifling part I had been able to play in the affair—very handsomely indeed."

The Ambassador paused, and appeared to be hesitating whether to say anything more. At last he added of his own accord:

"When I finally took my leave she drew a magnificent ring from her own finger and presented it to me.

"'For the service you have rendered to the Queen Regent of Spain my Prime Minister will thank you,' she said. 'For that which you have rendered to the mother of Alfonso, she begs you to accept this souvenir.'"

My host accompanied me to the outer gate of his hotel. The night air was heavy with the perfume of orange trees, standing in green tubs around the courtyard.

"You will respect what I have told you tonight in the most sacred confidence," he said, as he pressed my hand at parting.

"M. l'Ambassadeur!"

"Good. I shall judge of your discretion by the time you come again."

Dancing Vogue Ousts Corsets

Pavlowa eloquent over the reform her art has accomplished, releasing women from the centuries long tyranny of stays

THE modern dance has run a tilt against the once unconquerable compress known as a corset and has put it to rout. So says Mlle. Anna Pavlowa, world-famous ballerina, who declares that two years of the tango have accomplished more than three centuries of crusading in liberating women from the torture of tight stays.

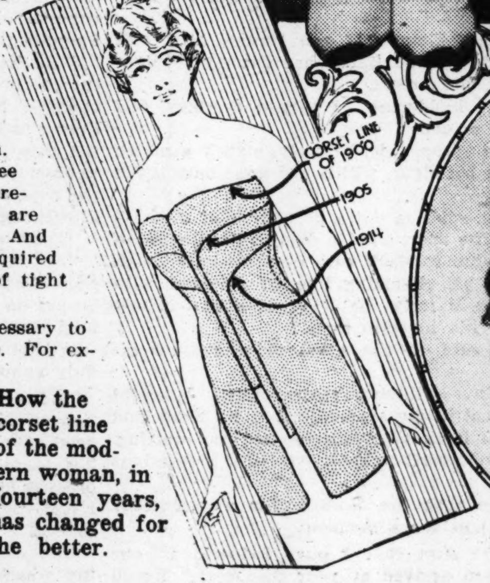
This consummation, long and devoutly wished for, is due to two facts, according to the Russian dancer. The first is, that it is physically impossible to perform the vigorous exertions demanded by modern dances when the chest and abdomen are crushed within a corslet of metal or bone. The second is that dancing so strengthens the muscles of the torso that the support once required from corsets is no longer necessary.

"I consider the popularity of modern society dancing one of the most potent influences for betterment that woman has ever known," Mlle. Pavlowa asserts. "If you wish to tango—and nearly every woman does—you cannot lace tightly. The corset of today has become really nothing more than a girdle, leaving the bust and abdomen unconfined. There is no interference with free breathing, and the vital organs are not compressed.

"I recognize that some features of present-day ballroom dancing may be harmful, but the benefit is greater than the harm. For this reason I am devoting a part of my programs this year to expositions of social dancing, with the intention of showing how the harmful features can be eliminated and only the benefits retained.

"It is simply impossible to dance the tango, or any of its allied steps, in a tight gown with a tightly laced corset underneath. For such dancing free breathing and free muscular movements are indispensable. Therefore styles are changing, and tight dresses are beginning to be looked upon with disfavor. And for the girl with the dancing figure, acquired only through much dancing, the support of tight lacing is not necessary.

"Some sort of a corset, of course, is necessary to make a perfect whole of a woman's costume. For example, how support the stockings? Go back to the thoroughly harmful, circulation-injuring elastic garter? Never. But a corset waist will answer this purpose perfectly.



How the corset line of the modern woman, in fourteen years, has changed for the better.

"In my historic dances I appear in many costumes representing periods when wasp-waists were the style; but I do not wear tight stays, even when taking the character of a grand dame of the court of Louis XIV, when 13-inch waists were the fashion. I wear only corset waists, and so do all the women members of the company. Society women and girls have found it as impossible as we do to fulfill the demands of the modern dances and at the same time retain a binding compress about their bodies.

"Even aside from the all-pervading dance, this is an age of exercise. Women who really exercise do not need stays. The finest thing about dancing is that it is almost an universal exercise. Nearly everyone has an opportunity to dance nowadays. Horseback riding, tennis, golf and other forms of exercise are practically only for a favored few, at least in a big city like St. Louis."

The tango, according to Mlle. Pavlowa, has in a trice conquered an abuse which has existed for many centuries. The French declare that the corset was due to Isabeau of Bavaria, wife of King Charles VI. She suffered from spinal curvature and wore a steel frame to hold her body erect. The ladies of the court, in their sycophantism, adopted armor also, and the corset was the result. Catherine di Medici, in her youth, prided herself upon her 13-inch girth, and the tiny waist acquired through lacing by Queen Elizabeth is made familiar in her many portraits. Before Isabeau there were corsets and museums contain many examples of them. In the middle ages they were made of thin metal and during the crusades wives vowed never to remove their corsets so long as their lords were at the wars with the Turks.

One revolt against the corset occurred under the first Empire in France; but this was only a faddish harking back to Greek styles and passed away, so that 20 years later waists that could be spanned with the hands were again the ambition of stylish belles. In the first decade of the nineteenth century, says Pavlowa, there was an organization of desperate males in America with the motto: "Natural waists or no wives." Now, she says, men can get natural waists in their wives without the aid of a motto—thanks to modern dancing.

That unfettered waists, in loose—but, of course, properly moulded gowns—have come to stay, is the ballerina's opinion. It is based upon her belief that dancing is not a fleeting fad, but will prove a permanent diversion in society. This, too, she declares, is a sensible age, when women realize that eugenics is not simply a thing to talk about, but understand that it is their serious duty to keep themselves as physically fit as possible.

In addition to requiring freedom for the lungs to operate vigorously, many of the present dances call for bends and dips which could not be performed if the torso were rigidly encased in a corset. There must be scope for the muscles of the waist to move with suppleness and ease, or else an otherwise pleasant and beneficial exercise would be converted into an ordeal of suffering, if it could be performed at all.

The enemy over which the tango has gained so swift and wide-spread a victory is of more venerable sway than most persons believe, and has passed, in its evolution through cruel forms which would be incredible if one did not know what sufferings woman has always been willing to offer up on the altar of style.

Greek and Roman women knew a device for compressing their waists which was, in some ways, an equivalent of the modern corset. Old Homer tells of Juno "wearing a girdle with a hundred fringes," and those who would doubt that these girdles were pulled as tightly as stays may read in Terence, the great Roman writer of comedies, a description of a belle as "not being a young girl like one of our own, whose mother compels her to tighten her body so that she may have a small waist."

The rest of Europe, receiving this style from the Romans, proceeded as the centuries went by to turn it into a veritable instrument of torture. There were corsets of stiff unyielding leather, cramping the torso into rigidity. And worse still, fashion finally dictated a corset of metal. Some examples are to be seen in the Musee Carnavalet in Paris. One is made of iron cross-bars securely riveted together. Others were forged out of two sheets of metal, with holes punched to make them lighter.

In the fifteenth century Spain became mistress of the world and set its fashions. Then came into vogue the Spanish basquine, a long, tight corset made of strong linen and fastened to a busk of wood or metal. The menace to health supplied by these monstrosities caused Henry III of France to issue an edict prohibiting their use. Montaigne, frank old pagan that he was, could not forebear a word of admiration at the way in which the women voluntarily endured in order to be in fashion. "In order to make their bodies Spanish," he wrote, "what hells will women not suffer!"

Two centuries ago a writer of the times upon dress, told of seeing at the Italian opera a singer "whose waist was painful to look at, for the lower part of her figure appeared like the monstrous appendage of a wasp, united to her body by a slender ligament." Even in the nineteenth century there was a Parisian actress in the music halls of London with a waist so tiny that spectators are said to have been in constant expectation that she would snap in two.

It is rare that one can speak in praise of a fashion, but Mlle. Pavlowa has scarcely anything but good words to say for the vogue of dancing, the popularity of which seems to be increasing every year. She believes that American dances are doing as great a work of emancipation for women as would an imperial rescript in China forbidding the bandaging of girls' feet.

NEW AND ODD THINGS IN SCIENCE

How Nature Will Replace a Bone That Has Been Lost

A REMARKABLE case of whitlow or bone felon, reported to the Lancet by Dr. Hughes R. Davies, physician to the Spanish and Portuguese Jews Hospital, London, shows what apparent miracles nature performs when she gets the chance.

A felon is an inflammation of the coating of the bone of the last joint of a finger. Most bones are covered with periosteum, but these bones of the finger tips have no periosteum, according to H. W. Allingham, the deficiency being supplied by the soft tissues of the finger. "Consequently," says Allingham, "when an inflammation attacks the tissues it strangulates the vessels running in it to the bone, and so cuts off the blood supply, and * * * causes the phalanx to necrose." That is to say, the bone of the finger tip begins to die.

Each of these bones is in two parts until about the twentieth year, when they unite. The lower part begins like a cushion between the body of the bone and the joint; this is called the epiphysis. When the bone dies and sloughs away, as it often does in serious felon, the epiphysis remains behind.

On Feb. 6 last a bootmaker, aged 57, consulted Dr. Davies about a felon on the tip of the middle finger of his right hand, probably caused by a wound from a septic nail in the sole of a boot. Dr. Davies lanced the finger deeply and widely. The inflammation continued to spread; the finger nail seemed doomed, and the doctor was tempted to amputate the finger. Fortunately, he waited.

The wound continued to suppurate profusely until March 2, when Dr. Davies inserted a forceps and took hold of the bone. This came away easily. The swelling subsided; the nail became healthy, but the discharge continued. On May 8, two small pieces of necrosed bone came away. The wound at once began to heal.

Now comes the most remarkable feature of this felon case. The boneless finger tip gradually stiffened, especially at the base. An X-ray photograph, taken on July 4, showed that a new bone was growing and that ossification was progressing rapidly, having apparently started from the epiphysis. By Oct. 4, when a second X-ray photograph was taken, the bone was almost perfect, the only defect being a deficiency in symmetry at the tip, probably due to the intense inflammatory destruction of the tissues at that point in the early stages of the felon.

Dr. Davies presents this case to show "what nature, guided, can perform; and also as a warning that a too-hurried use of the scalpel is not always desirable."

What Worry Is, How It Makes Us Sigh and Turn Pale

WORRY affects the whole body, making us sigh, turn pale, go into a "cold sweat' and feel utterly depressed. These are physiological effects of a purely psychic cause. How they are produced is explained in the Medical Record by Dr. Erle D. Forrest of Tuft's College Medical School:

"The physical manifestations of worry in general may be said to be: depression of respiration, sighing, disturbances in rate and force of heart beat, vasomotor changes, disturbances in secretion, pallor, cold extremities, relaxation and decreased mobolity of the alimentary tract, dilation of the pupil, loss of weight, insomnia and general physical exhaustion."

Dr. Forrest says that in every individual's brain there is a limited quantity of nervous energy stored up. It seems to rest in the chromatin granules of the nerve cells, for any liberation of nervous energy results in a physiological degeneration of these granules and consequently of the cells themselves. Any prolonged discharge of nervous energy diminishes by so much the amount left in the brain cells.

This is just what takes place in worry. Through mental overactivity discharges of nervous energy to all parts of the body take place through the spinal cord and the sympathetic system. Normally, such action is followed by gradual regeneration; but in worry no opportunity for such regeneration is given.

Overstimulation of the sympathetic nerves causes decreased activity of such nerves as those of the eye, which brings about dilation of the pupil. Depression of the vagus, phrenic and intercostal nerves decreases the rate of breathing. "The sigh, so often observed in worried individuals, is simply a very deep inspiration, which occasionally takes place to compensate for what would otherwise be insufficient oxygenation of the blood."

The peripheral blood vessels become constricted, producing pallor. The secretions are often reduced in amount, producing dry mouth and lips. If the sympathetic nerves be severely stimulated there will be an increased secretion in spite of the diminished blood supply, and this is manifested in the "cold sweat."

Dr. Forrest advances these as theories, remarking that there is an enormous field still open for further scientific investigation.

Blood Factory Found in the Spleen

IT has long been believed that the spleen played an important role in the production or manufacture of blood. Definite proof of this has been lacking, but it is now furnished by Dr. Dudley H. Morris of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, in a detailed report to the Journal of Experimental Medicine.

Dr. Morris made a careful and exact count of the number of corpuscles, red and white, in the blood entering the spleen by the splenic artery and in that leaving it by the splenic vein. His subjects were living dogs, cats and rabbits. The blood that came out from their spleens contained an average of about 23 per cent more red corpuscles and about 270 per cent more white corpuscles than that which went in. It also contained larger and more perfect red corpuscles and these seemed richer in hemoglobin.

"These results," writes Dr. Morris, "all point to the inevitable conclusion that the spleen is a blood-forming organ of prime importance. The fact that the organ can be extirpated without causing death or even considerable detriment to the animal organism does not militate against this conclusion. Other organs (hemolymph nodes, bone marrow and adenoid tissues in general) may assume part of the role of the spleen when this is absent."

The spleen is the largest of the ductless glands, so called because they have no ducts that lead anywhere. The blood goes into them by arteries and comes out of them by veins, and any work they do in the economy of the body must be performed upon the blood while it is in them. It is situated on the left side, in the back of the abdomen, between the left kidney, the diaphragm and the stomach. It is about five inches long. It receives its blood through the big tortuous splenic artery that arises from the aorta. It returns its blood to the portal vein through the splenic vein.

SICK headache, or migraine, is a condition that in spite of its commonness is little understood by the doctors. The following remarks about its causes are taken from a lecture by Sir Lauder Brunton, the famous English physician. Though they contain no suggestion as to its cure, they give a clear description of how it takes place.

Sir Lauder has had only too many opportunities to observe sick headache on himself. He says that some authorities describe the temporal artery—which you can feel throbbing on your own temple—as much contracted during the headache, while others describe it as widely dilated and throbbing. His own observations lead him to say that both are right and both are wrong, it depending on just where they feel the artery.

"Sometimes," he says, "during a fit of migraine I have found my temporal artery widely dilated and throbbing (Fig. 2), at other times I have it hard and contracted, like a piece of whipcord (Fig. 3); but when it was dilated, if I followed it onward toward the periphery, I ascertained that the ascending temporal branch was contracted like a piece of piano wire (Fig. 3). If I followed the contracted temporal artery back toward the heart, I found that the carotid on that side as thick as my thumb, distended to three times its normal diameter, and pulsating violently."

He therefore came to the conclusion that there is peripheral, that is to say surface, contraction and central dilatation of the arteries. The ache "is to a great extent due to the stretching action exerted on the contracted temporal artery by the blood which tries to pour into it from the dilated carotid."

The headache can be stopped by pressing upon the carotid so as to stop the pulse in the temporal artery. "Unfortunately, however, it is almost impossible to compress the carotid without also pressing upon the vagus nerve, and the sense of oppression on the chest which this produces is so great that one is generally obliged to stop the compression after a few seconds, although the moment the finger is removed the pain in the head comes back with a rush of peculiar intensity.

"Migraine is often regarded as a neuralgic condition, but the observations upon my own head which I have just described have convinced me that the pain is to a great extent like that of colic, where we find intense pain due to spasmodic contraction of one part of the intestine with dilation or distension of another."

Foot and Mouth Disease, Its Symptomology and Danger

FOOT and mouth disease, the epidemic of which in many parts of the United States has caused such a sensation in the last few weeks, is thus described by the Journal of the American Medical Association:

"It is an acute, highly infectious disease, which occurs chiefly in cattle, sheep, goats and swine, though other animals such as the horse and dog, as well as certain wild animals, are attacked also, and it may affect human beings. In animals it is characterized especially by the eruption of vesicles in the mouth and on the feet.

"In cattle the incubation period averages from three to five days, whereupon a moderate fever with loss of appetite and other general symptoms sets in. In two or three days small blisters appear on the lining of the mouth, and now the fever usually subsides. At the same time one or more feet may show tenderness and swelling of the skin, soon vesicles form here also and the animal goes lame.

"Usually the milk is altered and reduced in quantity; blisters and ulcers may form on the udder. There is marked loss of weight, as the animals do not eat because of the pain. In this, the ordinary form, in which the death rate is very small except among the young, the symptoms fade away in from 10 to 20 days or so, except when complicating local secondary infections delay recovery. There are also severe forms with extensive infection of the respiratory tract and gastro-intestinal inflammation which frequently end in sudden death.

"The cause of the disease is present in the contents of the vesicles, the discharges from the ulcers, the saliva, the milk, etc., but as a rule not after the tenth day. It is stated that animals having had the disease may carry the virus for months. Any susceptible species may infect any other susceptible species.

"Contamination of fodder, of stalls, of feeding and drinking troughs, of milk and milk products and of the hands and clothes of drovers serve to spread the disease, which often travels over wide stretches of country with remarkable rapidity, as shown by the present outbreak.

"The disease may affect human beings, especially children, being transmitted by milk from diseased cows (experimentally verified) and by butter and cheese made from such milk as well as through wounds and in other ways. While the course usually is favorable an epidemic described by Siegel had a mortality of 8 per cent. The manifestations are fever, digestive disturbances and vesicular eruption on the lips, the oropharyngeal lining."

Ear Drums and Death in Water

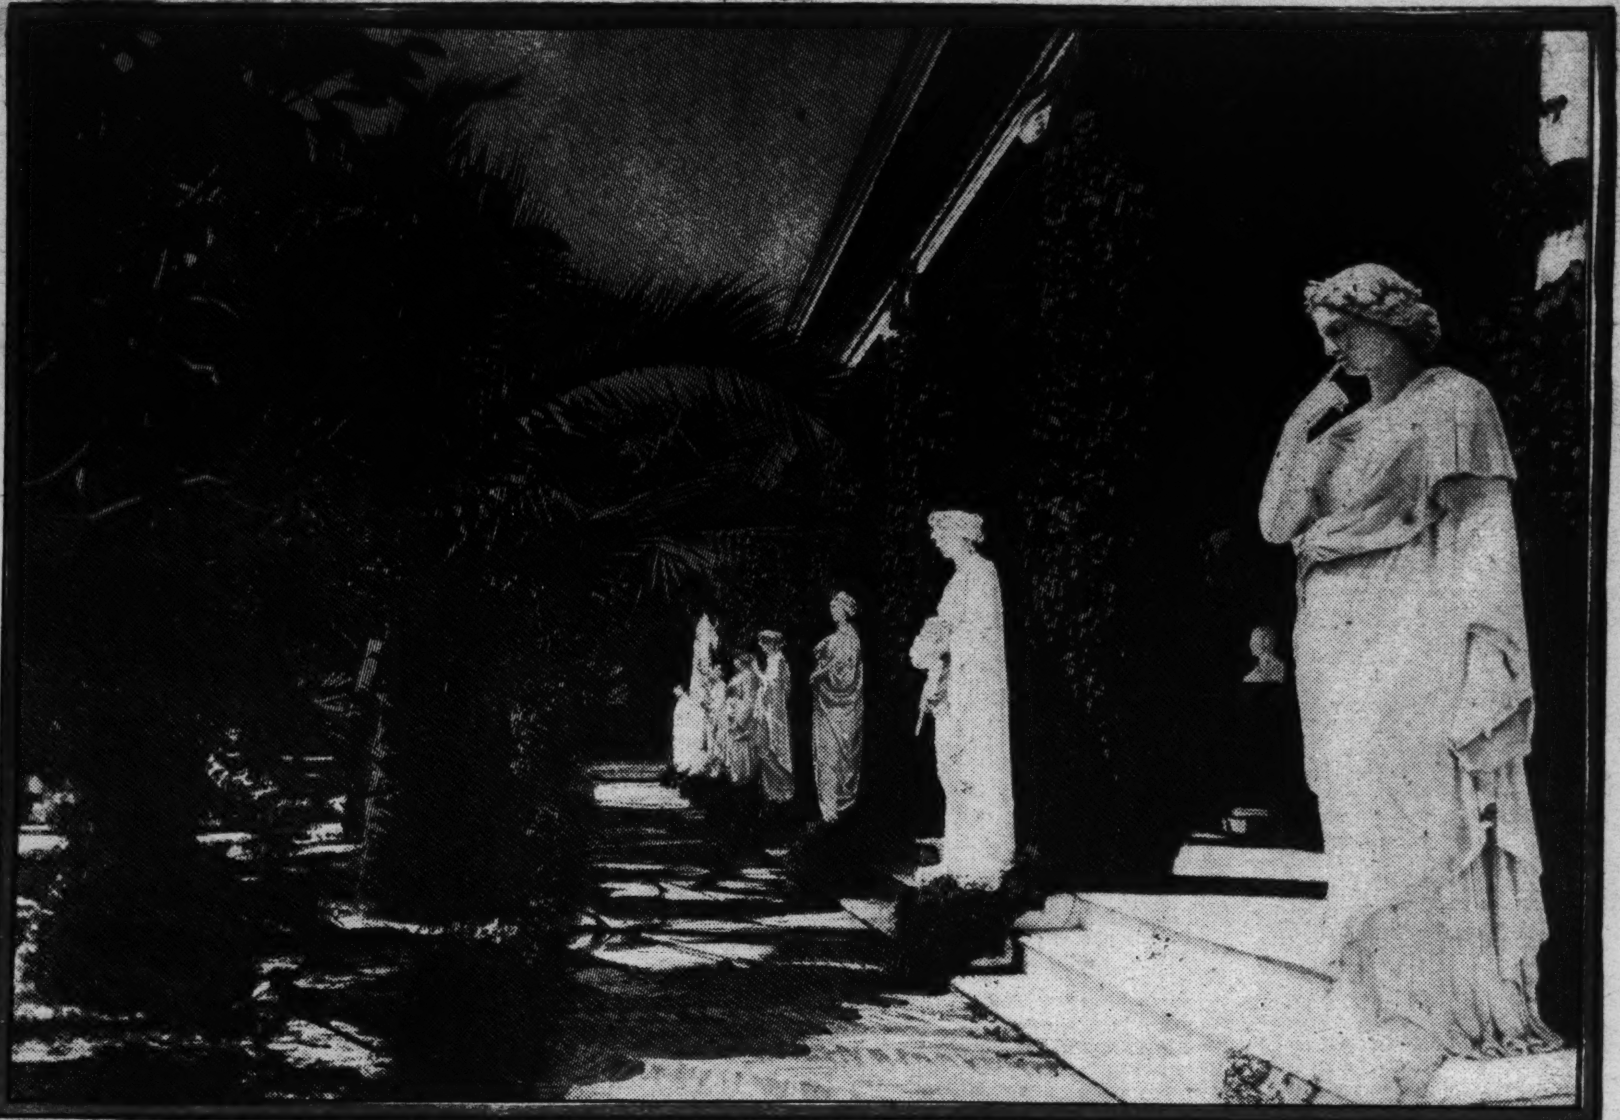
SUDDEN death of swimmers has never been explained satisfactorily, but it is generally assumed that it is due to cramps that affect the respiratory muscles. The Medical Record says there is another theory that "has never received the attention which it merits." This is that cold water penetrating the ear sets up an irritation in the delicate passages of the inner ear. It cites an address delivered by Dr. Guettich before the Berlin Otological Society, in which he revived this theory.

The irritation of the labyrinth of the inner ear by cold water might cause sudden paralysis, just as a shock to it through a sharp blow on the chin will cause a "knock-out." The symptoms of the swimmer and the fighter are similar; they can make motions but cannot direct them; they may become temporarily unconscious. In the case of the swimmer, of course, drowning follows unless someone help him.

The Medical Record says that persons with perforated ear drums are those chiefly menaced by this accident, although it may occur to others. And this in spite of the fact that children with large perforations of the ear drum often swim and dive with impunity.

Jupiter's Ninth Satellite Is Discovered

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the discovery by Mr. Nicholson of the Lick observatory of a ninth satellite to Jupiter. This is described as so faint as to be invisible in even our largest telescopes. It was discovered by photography, another illustration of the fact that a long exposure will frequently reveal objects invisible to the eye through any telescope. This latest addition to Jupiter's family has a retrograde motion and a period of about three years.



Portico of the Kaiser's Summer Cottage

Do you want to buy the Kaiser's summer cottage? It is going cheap for only $5,000,000. It cost $7,000,000, but the owner is forced for business reasons to sell. It is called the Villa Achilleion and is the most beautiful structure on the celebrated island of Corfu. The picture shows one of the vistas along the facade. The villa was first built for the Empress Elizabeth of Austria in 1890-91, but was bought at auction by the Kaiser, who designed it for a summer home for the Kaiserin. It is thought that the fear Greece will join the allies in the present war prompted the Kaiser to offer the place for sale.

Corfu is in the Ionian Sea off the coast of Albania. It is supposed to be Homer's island of Scheria.
